PREFACE.

A Regiſter of the births, diſeaſes, and deaths among any conſiderable number of people will eaſily afford much uſeful information to philoſophers in general, as well as to the ſtateſmen and phyſicians of the particular country, in which it is kept. For their ſakes therefore, and by their means for the ſake of the public, ſome pains have been taken to make as perfect a collection, as was poſſible, of all the London bills of mortality, from their beginning to this preſent year 1758. It can only be from a long ſeries of ſuch regiſters, that we are enabled to make any near approaches to truth, in the calculations founded upon them; and the longer the ſeries is, the nearer will our approaches be. But as theſe bills are publiſhed in looſe leaves, and very little care has hitherto been taken to preſerve them, it is evident, that the keeping of this regiſter has loſt a great part of its uſe. For it is become a matter of great trouble to find any number of bills together, greater perhaps than many of thoſe would chuſe to take, who are able, and might be willing, to draw out ſeveral important concluſions from them, when thrown in their way, as by the preſent publication.

Notwithſtanding all the ſearch, which has been made, many of theſe bills have hitherto proved irrecoverable; and the reſt would probably have had the ſame fate, if this collection had been deferred. Perhaps this publication may be the means of bringing thoſe, which are wanted, to light, if they are any where extant; and of preſerving thoſe, which will be publiſhed hereafter.

As a ſpecimen of the uſe, which may be made of them, there are ſubjoined to this collection:

Capt. Graunt's Natural and Political Obſervations on the Bills of Mortality:

Sir William Petty's Eſſay concerning the Growth of the City of London, with the Meaſures, Periods, Cauſes, and Conſequences thereof.

The very judicious performance of Corbyn Morris, Eſq; intitled, Obſervations on the paſt Growth and preſent State of the City of London:

And laſtly, A comparative view of the diſeaſes and ages, for the laſt thirty years, drawn from the bills of mortality, with their proportions to a thouſand; and alſo a table of the probabilities of life, for the laſt thirty years, compared with that of Mr. Smart's, for the firſt ten of the ſaid thirty; for all which the public is obliged to an accurate and careful calculator.

Though the reader is here preſented with the beſt materials, which could be had, it is but fair to acquaint him, that theſe bills are very far from being ſo accurate, as they might have been; and therefore, that no greater authority may be allowed them, than they deſerve, it may be of uſe to point out the ſeveral cauſes of this imperfection.

Many obvious and apparent defects in the weekly and yearly bills of mortality occur to every one, who has looked into this ſubject: but others, not ſo generally known, can hardly eſcape thoſe, whoſe nearer ſituation gives them an opportunity of enquiring into this matter with more exactneſs.

Our bills muſt plainly be a very defective regiſter of births, as

1. They extend only to baptiſms, which are adminiſtered according to the rites and uſage of the church of England. Very few of the numerous body of diſſenters, and none of the Roman-catholicks, are included in this number.

2. They take no notice of thoſe, who die unbaptized; or of thoſe, perhaps no inconſiderable number among the loweſt claſs of the people, who never are brought to be baptized at all. This defect is probably not made up by ſuch of the diſſenters, who may occaſionally be baptized in the form of the eſtabliſhed church.

Suppoſing then the papiſts and proteſtant diſſenters to make up one ſixth part of the whole number of inhabitants; the baptiſms, as they now ſtand in the bills, muſt be encreaſed in this proportion, to give the true number of births within the bills of mortality.

Theſe bills muſt be alſo an imperfect regiſter of deaths, as intending only to comprehend perſons belonging to the church of England, and buried according to the form of its ſervice.

Some few indeed among the poorer ſort, both of papiſts and diſſenters, who live at a diſtance from their reſpective burial-grounds, and cannot bear the expence of being carried thither, are buried according to the rites of the church of England, and by that means have a place in the weekly bills.

Some have been willing to think, that, though the bills are defective in the ſeveral articles of births and burials, yet they are defective in nearly the ſame degree; ſo that a proportion is ſtill in ſome meaſure kept up. But the laſt obſervation deſtroys this ſuppoſed proportion; as the burials of ſome few papiſts, and of more diſſenters, but the births of none in either perſuaſion, are regiſtered there.

Another defect in the bills, not ſo generally attended to, is, that the number of perſons, carried into the country to be buried, is not brought to account in them. Many are frequently removed from one pariſh to be buried in another, that are both within the bills; which makes no alteration upon the whole. But great numbers are carried from pariſhes in town to be buried in the country. This number has probably encreaſed, as the faſhion of having country-houſes has more prevailed. A few indeed, who die elſewhere, are brought to be buried in pariſhes within the bills: but the number of theſe is very diſproportionate to thoſe, who are carried out. A diſtinct account of this matter ought to be kept in the ſeveral pariſhes, but ſeldom is kept with any exactneſs.

In one of the largeſt and moſt populous pariſhes in Weſtminſter, in which as careful a regiſter is made as in any, the account is found to ſtand thus:

Buried here each year at an average, for the laſt ten years, ——		1074
Carried out to be buried every year, at an average, —— —		261
Brought in every year, at an average, —— ——	124
Of theſe, at leaſt one ſixth are children of the pariſh out at nurſe in the neighbourhood, and to be conſidered as perſons living and dying in the pariſh—	20	104
Difference between thoſe carried out and brought in —— ——		157
		1074
Total of perſons dying in the pariſh each year,		1231

This

This may be of ſome uſe in forming a judgment of the reſt; and yet this is far from being perfect. Thoſe, who are brought in to be buried, are carefully regiſtered; thoſe, who are carried out, are not ſo. Such are entered by themſelves in the burial-account, as come to the knowledge of thoſe, whoſe buſineſs it is to attend to theſe matters: but of theſe, many are heard of but by accident, and ſome not at all.

Suppoſing the number of perſons carried away, and not brought to account, to be one ſixth (which I think comes as near the truth, as any ſuppoſition we can make) this will make the whole number of deaths to be one fifth more than are regiſtered in the bills.

If the ſtate of deaths, which are not regiſtered in the bills, be the ſame, or nearly the ſame, in this pariſh as in others, the defect in this article may with ſome degree of probability be ſupplied. But there is another material defect, which affects both baptiſms and burials, and cannot be ſupplied ſo probably. This ariſes from the neglect of pariſh-clerks and their deputies, in not making exact returns to the common-hall. From ſome large pariſhes no account is ſent for ſeveral weeks together, and the account for ſeveral is ſometimes inſerted in one weekly bill. If this was done without any omiſſions, the account would come right at the end of the year: but omiſſions in many, there is good reaſon to believe, are never ſupplied or corrected. This is often to be aſcribed to negligence; but it is ſometimes owing to diſputes between the clerk in orders and the officiating clerk, that the bills of births and burials are neither ſo regularly kept, nor ſo exactly returned, as they ought to be. What allowance is to be made for theſe omiſſions, can be hardly ſettled; but it is judged, that they are not inconſiderable.

Mr. Maitland obſerves (a), that the bills of mortality are very defective, none being mentioned therein, but ſuch as are buried in parochial cemeteries; by which means no account is taken of thoſe, who are buried in many burial grounds belonging to the church of England; ſuch as St. Paul's cathedral, Weſtminſter abbey, the Temple church, St. Peter's ad Vincula, the Rolls, and Lincoln's-Inn chapels, the Charter-houſe, and divers others belonging to hoſpitals.

(a) Hiſtory of London, p. 537. Edition 1739.

And

And he farther ſays (b), that the number of perſons buried, in and from the city and ſuburbs of London in 1729, not taken notice of in the bills of mortality, amounted to 3038.

Every pariſh appoints a ſearcher, whoſe buſineſs it is to examine the corpſe, and to report the diſtemper. The low capacity of the perſon uſually choſen into this office has been made an objection to the truth and juſtneſs of the bills. But with regard to natural deaths, there ſeems no other capacity neceſſary in theſe ſearchers, than that of relating what they hear. For the wiſeſt perſon in the pariſh would be able to find out very few diſtempers from a bare inſpection of the dead body, and could only bring back ſuch an account, as the family and friends of the deceaſed would be pleaſed to give. And it ſhould indeed be always remembered from whom this account comes, that proper allowances may be made for miſtakes, or miſrepreſentations, in thoſe diſtempers, which they might not be very able to know, or not very willing to own.

Beſides the putting of the calculator on his guard, it may be hoped, that the expoſing of the preſent faulty manner, in which the London bills of mortality are kept, will excite thoſe, who have it in their power, to find out a remedy.

The antients probably never kept any regiſters of this ſort; and accordingly they appear to have had no juſt notion of the proportions of deaths in the ſeveral ages, if we may form any judgment about ſuch a ſerious matter from what occurs in ſo ludicrous a writer as Lucian. For in his Cataplus he tells us, that out of a thouſand perſons, who died, there were three hundred and ninety eight above ſixty years of age; which is, I ſuppoſe, double to the general proportion, and is ſo much out of nature, that we need not doubt his having ſaid it from a random gueſs, without any helps from obſervation.

The pariſh-regiſters in England began no earlier than in 1538, in conſequence of one of the ſeventeen injunctions ſet forth that year, in the name of king Henry VIII. by the lord Thomas Cromwell, his vice-regent in eccleſiaſtical matters; which injunction appointed, that the parſon, vicar, or curate of every pariſh, ſhould keep a true and exact regiſter of all weddings, chriſtenings, and burials. And the weekly bills of mortality, containing an account of chriſtenings as well as burials, taken by the company of pariſh-clerks in London, had their riſe on the 21ſt of December, 1592.

(a) Hiſtory of London, p. 537.

containing

In the year 1594, the particular or weekly account, both of chriſtenings and burials, was firſt made public, as alſo the general or yearly account, untill the 18th of December, 1595, when it was diſcontinued upon the ceaſing of the plague.

It is proper to be remarked here, that the bill of mortality, now in its infancy, conſiſted of but one hundred and nine pariſhes, which pariſhes were then only alphabetically ſet down, without making any diſtinction of the out-pariſhes from thoſe within the walls; whereas afterwards, in 1665, when Mr. John Bell, clerk of the company of pariſh-clerks, publiſhed at London, in quarto, his London's Remembrancer; or, a true account of every particular week's chriſtenings and mortality, in all the years of peſtilence, within the cognizance of the bills of mortality; the ſaid bill comprehended one hundred and thirty pariſhes, and diſtinguiſhed the pariſhes by the four diviſions of the ninety ſeven pariſhes within the walls, the ſixteen pariſhes without the walls, the twelve out-pariſhes in Middleſex and Surry, and the five pariſhes in the city and liberties of Weſtminſter.

In the ninety ſeven pariſhes within the walls was wanting that of St. James Duke's place.

In the ſixteen pariſhes, being part within the liberties, and part without, were wanting; St. Bartholomew the Great, Bridewell precinct, and Trinity in the Minories. Which three pariſhes, together with that of St. James Duke's place, Mr. Bell conceived were not inſerted in the bill, on account of their being all precincts.

The twelve out-pariſhes in Middleſex and Surry, and the five in Weſtminſter, were then wholly exempt.

In the year 1603, on the 29th of December, the firſt of the continued weekly bills of mortality extant at the pariſh-clerks hall begins. Since which time a weekly account hath been kept there of chriſtenings and burials.

In 1604, were added to the hundred and nine pariſhes theſe undermentioned; to the then thirteen, the three pariſhes mentioned to be wanting of the ſixteen, viz. St. Bartholomew the Great, Bridewell precinct, and Trinity in the Minories; and theſe eight, viz.

St. Cle-

St. Clements Danes, St. Leonard Shoreditch,
St. Giles in the Fields, St. Mary in Whitechapel,
St. James at Clarkenwell, St. Martin in the Fields, St. Catharine Tower, St. Mary Magdalen Bermondſey.

In 1606 was added to thoſe eight St. Mary at the Savoy.

In 1611, on the 19th of January, the pariſh-clerks, who had been incorporated by letters patent of the 17th of king Henry III. in the year 1233, by the name of the Fraternity of St. Nicholas, were reincorporated by charter of the 9th of king James I.

In 1625, the bills of mortality having now acquired a general reputation, the company of pariſh-clerks obtained a decree, or act, under the ſeal of the High-commiſſion-court or Star-chamber, for the keeping of a printing-preſs in their hall, in order to the printing of the weekly and general bills within the city of London and liberties thereof; for which purpoſe a printer is aſſigned by the archbiſhop of Canterbury. And on the 18th of July that year, a printing-preſs was accordingly ſet up, and an order then made, that from thenceforth the weekly reports of the burials, within the limits aforeſaid, ſhould be printed, with the number of burials againſt every pariſh; which till that time had not been done.

The year following, viz. 1626, the pariſh or precinct of St. James Duke's place was added to the then ninety ſix pariſhes within the walls: all which pariſhes, ever ſince their ſeveral additions, and the other ever ſince the year 1604, brought to the company of pariſh clerks, not only the number of all the chriſtenings and burials, but alſo an account of all the diſeaſes and caſualties, though no ſuch account was publiſhed till 1629.

In this year, 1626, the city of Weſtminſter was likewiſe added, which brought in only the number of the chriſtenings, burials, and plague, without taking notice of or ſpecifying any other diſeaſes or caſualties.

In 1629, was inſerted an account of the diſeaſes and caſualties, with the diſtinction of males and females.

In 1636, the pariſhes of Hackney, Iſlington, Lambeth, Newington, Rotherith, and Stepney, brought in their reports of the chriſtenings, burials, and plague, in like manner and form, as the city of Weſtminſter had before done.

In 1647, the pariſh of St. Paul, Covent-Garden, was added, making the number of out-pariſhes ten.

In 1660, the bills were new-modelled, and the account of all the diſeaſes and caſualties, in the whole 130 pariſhes, was brought in; and the twelve pariſhes in Middleſex and Surrey were made a diviſion by themſelves; and the five pariſhes within the city and liberties of Weſtminſter were made a diviſion in the bills by themſelves; whereas before they were intermixed with each other.

In 1665, the totals of the chriſtenings were diſtinctly ſet down in the bills, under each of the four diviſions of the ninety ſeven, ſixteen, twelve, and five pariſhes reſpectively.

In 1670, St. Paul's, Shadwell, heretofore part of Stepney and a chapel of eaſe to the ſame, was added to the twelve pariſhes in Middleſex and Surrey.

In 1671, Chriſt-church in Surrey, heretofore part of St. Saviour's, Southwark, was added to the out-pariſhes in Middleſex and Surrey, making the number of pariſhes one hundred and thirty two.

In 1685, July 14, St. James's Weſtminſter was added;

In 1686, April 6, St. Anne's Weſtminſter;

In 1694, April 17, St. John Wapping;

In 1726, June 28, St. Mary le Strand;

In 1729, October 7, St. Geoge Hanover Square; and December 16, St. Peter ad Vincula, in the Tower of London, was added: but a conteſt ariſing between the inhabitants of the Tower-liberty without and within the Tower, whether this church of St. Peter ad Vincula was parochial or not, the queſtion was tried in the court of King's-bench at Weſtminſter, in 1730, when it was determined in the negative; which occaſioned this church to be left out of the bill of mortality ſoon after.

In the ſame year, 1729, were added likewiſe the pariſhes of

Chriſt-Church Spittlefields,

St. George Radcliffe High-way,

St. George the Martyr, in Queen's-ſquare, and

In 1730, September 22, St. Anne Limehouſe;

In 1731, April 13, St. George Bloomſbury;

Auguſt 3, St. John Evangeliſt Weſtminſter;

In 1733, Auguſt 21, St. John in Southwark;

November 27, St. Luke in Old-ſtreet; and

In 1746, St. Matthew Bethnal-Green.

in 1754 St. John at Clerkenwell.

To

To what Capt. Graunt obſerves, in his fourth chapter on the plague, may be added the following remark. Before the plague begins, there ſometimes dies not one in a week of the ſpotted fever, and never at moſt above four (a). But in the firſt week of the plague there die twelve, and afterwards the number increaſes as the plague increaſes, ſo that there frequently die above a hundred, and one week one hundred and ninety. This fever decreaſes again with the plague. There is reaſon therefore to ſuſpect, that this fever was the ſame from the beginning, as the true plague: at leaſt, if we conſider what has juſt now been obſerved, we muſt ſuppoſe, that the true plague very often paſſed under the name of the ſpotted-fever. This might be done willfully by ſome, who were unwilling to own, that the plague was in their houſes; which is worth the attention of the magiſtrate. It probably ſometimes happened by a miſtake through ignorance; purples only appearing in ſeveral, who had the plague, without any buboes or carbuncles; which is worth the attention of phyſicians (b). But, however it happened, we muſt conclude, that great as the reputed number was of thoſe, who died of the plague, the real number was ſtill greater, by all or moſt of the one thouſand nine hundred and twenty nine, who are ſaid to have died of the ſpotted-fever; for this is a greater number, than is found to have died of it in twenty other years. The number of thoſe likewiſe, who die of the plain or common fever, may be obſerved to riſe every week with the plague, and to decreaſe with it; ſo that in one week, during the height of the plague, three hundred and eighty three are reputed to die of a fever, when at the beginning and end of the year not above one tenth of this number is found under this article; and in the whole year, the number of deaths by fevers is five times as great as that of ordinary years. So that from both theſe articles we may fairly take five thouſand, and add them to ſixty eight thouſand five hundred and ninety ſix, the reputed number of thoſe, who were deſtroyed by the plague: and even then we ſhall be far from having the whole number; for the bills of mortality did not take in thoſe, who died among the

(a) See the weekly bills for the plague year printed at London 1665, quarto, by E. Cotes, printer to the company of pariſh-clerks.

(b) "The practitioners in phyſic --- ſtand amazed to meet with ſo many various ſymptoms, which they find among their patients (who are ill of the plague). One week the general diſtempers are blotches and boils; the next week as clear-ſkined as may be. But death ſpares neither. One week full of ſpots and tokens, and perhaps the ſucceeding bill none at all". A letter from John Tilliſon, London, Sept. 14, 1665, to Dr. Sancroft, dean of St. Paul's, and afterwards archbiſhop of Canterbury, among the archbiſhop's papers, in the Britiſh Muſeum, vol. 3785.

diſſenters, or in Ludgate, Newgate, Chriſt-church hoſpital, and many other places (c).

On this head of the plague it is very obſervable, that London has now been free from it for near a century, though before the laſt plague there are but few yearly bills without it; and there hardly paſſed any twenty years together, in one of which it did not rage to ſuch a degree, that it could not be miſtaken, which might be ſuſpected, when only a few are ſaid to have died of it. This would almoſt tempt one to doubt the truth of the common opinion, that the plague was never bred in England, but has always been imported from other countries, where it is endemial. For if it always comes from abroad, and the danger of its being imported is in proportion to the imports made from other nations, we muſt have had much more of the infection brought to us during the laſt century, than in any preceding one, as the trade of the nation has been unqueſtionably greater. But perhaps it will be thought, that though we have no cauſes among us ſtrong enough to produce the plague, yet there may be ſuch, as will diſpoſe us to receive the infection at one time, and be too weak to admit it at another; juſt as experience has frequently taught us, that the ſame quantity of infection will ſometimes communicate the ſmall-pox, and ſometimes fail of doing it. Whether then we are become leſs apt to breed, or to receive this dreadful evil, one of the cauſes of this happy event ſeems to be the greater freſhneſs and purity of the air of London, ſince the rebuilding of it after the great fire; the ſtreets being made wider, and the inhabitants not crowded ſo cloſely together. As it is perhaps owing to its being more thinly peopled than the reſt of the world, that America has never yet been viſited with the plague, while the crowded and filthy cities of Cairo and Conſtantinople are ſeldom free from it. Another, and probably the moſt effectual preſervative has been the great quantity of water from the Thames and the New river, which, for the laſt century, has waſhed the houſes ſo plentifully, and afterwards running down into the kennels and common ſewers, conſtantly hinders, or weakens the tendency to putrefaction: and if more water could ſtill be derived into our houſes, ſtreets, and common ſewers, it might perhaps fully make amends for the imperfections of quarantines, ariſing from the thoughtleſſneſs, negligence, avarice, and obſtinacy of thoſe, who may have the direction of them, or of thoſe by whom they ſhould be performed.

(c) See the letter of J. Tilliſon. The writer mentions a report, which ſeems almoſt incredible, that the quakers buried a thouſand in a week for ſome weeks together.

The

The deaths imputed to the meaſles are very remarkably different in different years: and yet it is poſſible, that this diſeaſe is not in reality ſo very irregularly epidemical or fatal, as by the bills it appears to be. The ſcarlet fever and malignant ſore throat often occaſion ſuch appearances upon the ſkin, as may eaſily be miſtaken for the meaſles by better judges, than the mothers and nurſes; who thinking themſelves able to diſtinguiſh this diſtemper, and equal to the management of it, often call in no other aſſiſtance. This miſtake is well known to have been ſometimes made within theſe few years, during which the ſcarlet fever and malignant ſore throat have been ſo common. It may perhaps have happened in every year, in which an extraordinary number of deaths are charged to the meaſles; and conſequently thoſe two formidable diſtempers, (if they are two diſtinct diſtempers, and not one and the ſame) being diſguiſed under the name of the meaſles, may have been older, and more general than is uſually imagined.

The large article of deaths by convulſions belongs chiefly, if not ſolely, to children under two years of age; which will eaſily appear, if in any year we ſet aſide the number of thoſe, who die by diſeaſes, in which children are known to have no ſhare, allowing at the ſame time to the children any reaſonable proportion of thoſe diſeaſes, to which they are ſubject in common with grown perſons: for there will ſtill remain the deaths of ſo many children to be accounted for, as will fill up, beſides the diſeaſes peculiar to them, almoſt the whole number of deaths by convulſions.

The yearly ſum of the deaths ranged under the heads of apoplexies, ſuddenly, planet-ſtruck, lethargies, and palſies, fluctuates without any conſtant increaſe or decreaſe, till the beginning of the preſent century: from which time this ſum has been perpetually increaſing, ſo that the middle proportion of it for every ten years to the total of the burials conſtantly exceeds that of the preceding ten years. In the laſt ten years this increaſe has been the greateſt of all, nearly one fourth more having died of theſe diſtempers, than there did at a medium in any other ſucceſſive ten years; and a double proportion died of them in theſe ten years, to what there did at an average in the ſame ſpace of time before the beginning of this century. Is this difference only an apparent one, ariſing from the placing of ſome deaths under theſe in the later bills, which formerly came under other articles? There ſeems no reaſon for ſuch a ſuſpicion, and the gradual gradual increaſe of theſe ſums is an argument againſt it. If the increaſe be real, is it owing to any alteration in our manners, or diet? And what is that alteration? The practice of drinking ſpirituous liquors muſt, probably, anſwer for ſome part of this; and it might be of public uſe, if ſome attention were paid to the finding out of the other cauſes.

But there does not appear to be any increaſe in the diſtempers juſt mentioned, or in any other, which is not likely to be abundantly made amends for, by the decreaſe in the numbers deſtroyed by the ſmall-pox, which may be hoped for from the practice of inoculation. The good effects of which do not yet appear for want of its being more general: for while inoculation prevails only among a part of any number of people, who all have an intercourſe with one another, it may occaſion as many deaths by ſpreading the diſtemper in, as it is called, the natural way, as it prevents among thoſe, on whom it is practiſed.

The reader may find, that the ſum total, as ſet down in the bills, of all the deaths, does not correſpond in ſome years to the ſum of the particulars, which is owing to ſome miſtake in the original bills.

The number of the inhabitants of Rhode-Iſland, taken by order of the lords commiſſioners of trade, was in the year

	Whites	Blacks
1730	15,302	2,633
1748	29,755	4,373
Dec. 24, 1755	35,939	4,697

And it is believed, that within the time here mentioned there had been little or no acceſſion made to them by new-comers from other places. From this account it appears, that the inhabitants of that country were nearly doubled in eighteen years: and great as this increaſe is, there are probably even among them ſome cauſes ſubſiſting, which hinder their increaſe from being ſo great, as it naturally would be. What then are we to think of the inhabitants of Great Britain, who increaſe ſo ſlowly, if they do at all, that ſome intelligent perſons have been inclined to believe, that they even decreaſe? And as to the inhabitants within the bills of mortality, it is evident, that there is a great waſte, and conſtant leſſening of their number, which is annually filled up by ſupplies from all parts of the country. Pride, poverty, the abuſe of ſpirituous liquors, the crowded manner of living in our cities, the unhealthfulneſs of many occupations, and the falſe ridicule thrown upon marriage, particularly by thoſe great patrons of debauchery, who wrote for the ſtage towards the end of the laſt century and in the beginning of the preſent, ſeem to be ſome of the cauſes, which reſtrain the natural fertility of mankind in Great Britain. Whoever could find them all out, and provide a proper remedy for them, as far as they will admit of being remedied, would remove evils, which do more to diſpeople this nation, than has ever been done by famine, war, or peſtilence. But it is not to be expected in a country ſo populous as England, that the increaſe ſhould be as great, as in thoſe parts of the globe, which are thinly peopled. For the nearer any country approaches to the point, at which it would be ſtocked with as many inhabitants as it can maintain, the more extenſively will the difficulties be felt of providing for children; and theſe may reaſonably diſcourage many from marrying early, and not a few from marrying at all.

The Foundling-hoſpital muſt have made a difference in the proportion of the births to the burials, and of the burials of infants to thoſe of adults, ever ſince it was firſt opened March 25, 1741; and a very conſiderable one, ever ſince it has received all the children that are brought; which it began to do in June 1756.

For though many children are ſent thither from the country, yet the greateſt part received into the hoſpital are undoubtedly born in London, and are accounted for in the births; but the deaths of none of theſe children are ever inſerted in the London bills. Such of them as die in the country, are buried there; and ſuch as die in the hoſpital, are buried in Pancras pariſh, which is out of the bills of mortality. This ſhould be attended to in all calculations, in which it may be concerned; and in particular, this will account for ſome part of the increaſed proportion of apoplexies, &c. to the other deaths for the laſt ten years; for theſe are not the diſeaſes of children, and conſequently there is little or no deduction made from theſe diſtempers, while a conſiderable deduction is made from the ſum total of the burials.

The following form of a bill of mortality is ſubmitted to the judgment of the reader.

Taken out of the Regiſter of the Company of Pariſh Clerks of London, &c. By John Bell, Clerk to the ſaid Company. London,* 1665, Quarto.

† Extracted from a Bill printed by John Windet, Printer to the Honourable City of London, in the Library of the late Sir HANS SLOANE, Bart. in the Britiſh Muſeum. N. B. Though ſome of the Numbers are evidently erroneous, ſince they do not agree with the Totals; yet it was thought proper to retain them, rather than alter them upon Conjecture; and this hath been likewiſe obſerved in reprinting ſeveral other Bills.

CHAP. I.

Of the Bills of Mortality, their beginning and progreſs.

THE firſt of the continued weekly bills of mortality extant at the pariſh clerks hall begins the twenty ninth of December 1603, being the firſt year of King JAMES his reign; ſince when a weekly account hath been kept there of burials and chriſtnings. It is true, there were bills before, viz. for the years 1592,-93,-94; but ſo interrupted ſince, that I could not depend upon the ſufficiency of them, rather relying upon thoſe accounts, which have been kept ſince in order, as to all the uſes I ſhall make of them.

2. I believe, that the riſe of keeping theſe accounts was taken from the plague: for the ſaid bills (for ought appears) firſt began in the ſaid year 1592, being a time of great mortality; and, after ſome diſuſe, were reſumed again in the year 1603, after the great plague then happening likewiſe.

3. Theſe bills were printed and publiſhed, not only every week, on Thurſdays, but alſo a general account of the whole year was given in upon the Thurſday before Chriſtmas-day: which ſaid general accounts have been preſented in the ſeveral manners following, viz. from the year 1603 to the year 1624, incluſive, according to the pattern here inſerted.

The general bill for the whole year, of all the burials and chriſtnings, as well within the city of London, and the liberties thereof, as in the nine out pariſhes adjoining to the city, with the Peſt-houſe belonging to the ſame: from Thurſday the 18th of December 1623, to Thurſday the 16th of December 1624, according to the report made to the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty by the company of the pariſh-clerks of London.

4. In the year 1625, every pariſh was particularized, as in the following bill: where note, that this next year of plague cauſed the augmentation and correction of the bills; as the former year of plague did the very being of them.

A general, or great bill for this year, of the whole number of burials, which have been buried of all diſeaſes, and alſo of the plague in every pariſh within the city of London, and the liberties thereof; as alſo in the nine out-pariſhes adjoining to the ſaid city; with the Peſt-houſe belonging to the ſame: from Thurſday the 16th day of December, 1624, to Thurſday the 15th day of December, 1625, according to the report made to the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty by the company of pariſh-clerks of London.

9. In the year 1660, the laſt-mentioned ten pariſhes, with Weſtminſter, Iſlington, Lambeth, Stepney, Newington, Hackney, and Redriff, are entered under two diviſions, viz. the one containing the twelve pariſhes lying in Middleſex and Surrey, and the other the five pariſhes within the city and liberties of Weſtminſter, viz. St. Clement Danes, St. Paul's Covent-Garden, St. Martin's in the Fields, St. Mary-Savoy, and St. Margaret's Weſtminſter.

10. We have hitherto deſcribed the ſeveral ſteps, whereby the bills of mortality are come up to their preſent ſtate: we come next to ſhew how they are made and compoſed, which is in this manner, viz. When any one dies, then, either by tolling, or ringing of a bell, or by beſpeaking of a grave of the ſexton, the ſame is known to the ſearchers, correſponding with the ſaid ſexton.

11. The ſearchers hereupon (who are antient matrons, ſworn to their office) repair to the place where the dead corps lies, and by view of the ſame, and by other enquiries, they examine by what diſeaſe or caſualty the corps died. Hereupon they make their report to the pariſh clerk, and he, every Tueſday night, carries in an account of all the burials and chriſtnings happening that week, to the clerk of the hall. On Wedneſday the general account is made up and printed, and on Thurſday publiſhed and diſperſed to the ſeveral families, who will pay four ſhillings per annum for them.

12. Memorandum, that although the general yearly bills have been ſet out in the ſeveral varieties aforementioned, yet the original entries in the hall-books were as exact in the very firſt year, as to all particulars, as now; and the ſpecifying of caſualties and diſeaſes was probably more.

General obſervations upon the caſualties.

IN my diſcourſes upon theſe bills, I ſhall firſt ſpeak of the caſualties; then give my obſervations with reference to the places and pariſhes comprehended in the bills; and next of the years and ſeaſons.

1. There ſeems to be good reaſon, why the magiſtrate ſhould himſelf take notice of the numbers of burials and chriſtnings, viz. to ſee whether the city increaſe or decreaſe in people; whether it increaſe proportionably with the reſt of the nation; whether it be grown big enough, or too big, &c. But why the ſame ſhould be made known to the people, otherwiſe than to pleaſe them, as with a curioſity, I ſee not.

2. Nor could I ever yet learn (from the many I have aſked, and thoſe not of the leaſt ſagacity) to what purpoſe the diſtinction between males and females is inſerted, or at all taken notice of? or why that of marriages was not equally given in? Nor is it obvious to every body, why the account of caſualties (whereof we are now ſpeaking) is made? The reaſon, which ſeems moſt obvious for this latter, is, that the ſtate of health in the city may at all times appear.

3. Now it may be objected, that the ſame depends moſt upon the accounts of epidemical diſeaſes, and upon the chief of them all, the plague. Wherefore the mention of the reſt ſeems only matter of curioſity.

4. But to this we anſwer, that the knowledge even of the numbers, which die of the plague, is not ſufficiently deduced from the meer report of the ſearchers, which only the bills afford; but from other ratiocinations, and comparings of the plague with ſome other caſualties.

5. For we ſhall make it probable, that in the years of plague, a quarter part more dies of that diſeaſe than are ſet down: the ſame we ſhall prove by other caſualties. Wherefore, if it be neceſſary to impart to the world a good account of ſome few caſualties, which ſince it cannot well be done without giving an account of them all, then is our common practice of ſo doing very apt and rational.

6. Now, to make theſe corrections upon the, perhaps, ignorant and careleſs ſearchers reports, I conſidered firſt of what authority they were of themſelves; that is, whether any credit at all were to be given to their diſtinguiſhments: and finding that many of the caſualties were but matter of ſenſe, as whether a child were abortive or ſtillborn; whether men were aged, that is to ſay, above ſixty years old, or thereabouts, when they died, without any curious determination; whether ſuch aged perſons died purely of age, as for that the innate heat was quite extinct, or the radical moiſture quite dried up (for I have heard ſome candid phyſicians complain of the darkneſs, which themſelves were in hereupon) I ſay, that theſe diſtinguiſhments being but matter of ſenſe, I concluded the ſearchers report might be ſufficient in the caſe.

7. As for conſumptions, if the ſearchers do but truly report (as they may) whether the dead corps were very lean and worn away, it matters not to many of our purpoſes, whether the diſeaſe were exactly the ſame, as phyſicians define it in their books. Moreover, in caſe a man of ſeventy five years old died of a cough (of which had he been free, he might have poſſibly lived to ninety) I eſteem it little error (as to many of our purpoſes) if this perſon be in the table of caſualties reckoned among the aged, and not placed under the title of coughs.

8. In the matters of infants I would deſire but to know clearly, what the ſearchers mean by infants; as whether children, that cannot ſpeak, as the word infant ſeems to ſignify, or children under two or three years old; although I ſhould not be ſatisfied, whether the infant died of wind, or of teeth, or of the convulſion, &c. or were choaked with phlegm, or elſe of teeth, convulſion, and ſcowring, apart, or together, which, they ſay, do often cauſe one another; for, I ſay, it is ſomewhat to know how many die uſually before they can ſpeak, or how many live paſt any aſſigned number of years.

9. I ſay, it is enough, if we know from the ſearchers but the moſt predominant ſymptoms; as that one died of the head-ach, who was ſorely tormented with it, though the phyſicians were of opinion, that the diſeaſe was in the ſtomach. Again, if one died ſuddenly, the matter is not great, whether it be reported in the bills, ſuddenly, apoplexy, or planet-ſtrucken, &c.

10. To conclude, in many of theſe caſes the ſearchers are able to report the opinion of the phyſician, who was with the patient, as they receive the ſame from the friends of the defunct: and in very many caſes, ſuch as drowning, ſcalding, bleeding, vomiting, making away themſelves, lunatics, ſores, ſmall-pox, &c. their own ſenſes are ſufficient, and the generality of the world are able pretty well to diſtinguiſh the gout, ſtone, dropſy, falling-ſickneſs, palſy, agues, pleuriſy, rickets, one from another.

11. But now as for thoſe caſualties, which are apteſt to be confounded and miſtaken, I ſhall in the enſuing diſcourſe preſume to touch upon them ſo far, as the learning of theſe bills hath enabled me.

12. Having premiſed theſe general advertiſements, our firſt obſervation upon the caſualties ſhall be, that in twenty years there dying of all diſeaſes and caſualties 229250, that 71124 died of the thruſh, convulſion, rickets, teeth and worms; and as abortives, chryſomes, infants, livergrown, and overlaid; that is to ſay, that about $\frac{1}{3}$ of the whole died of thoſe diſeaſes, which we gueſs did all light upon children under four or five years old.

13. There died alſo of the ſmall-pox, ſwine-pox, and meaſles, and of worms without convulſions, 12210, of which number we ſuppoſe likewiſe, that about $\frac{1}{2}$ might be children under ſix years old. Now, if we conſider that ſixteen of the ſaid or more frequent charity: only indeed the magiſtrate is both the beggar, and the diſpoſer of what is got by begging; ſo as all givers have a moral certainty, that their charity ſhall be well applied.

5. Moreover, I queſtion, whether what we give to a wretch, that ſhews us lamentable ſores and mutilations, be always out of the pureſt charity? that is, purely for GOD's ſake; for as much as when we ſee ſuch objects, we then feel in ourſelves a kind of pain and paſſion by conſent, of which we eaſe ourſelves, when we think we eaſe them, with whom we ſympathized; or elſe we beſpeak aforehand the like commiſeration in others towards ourſelves, when we ſhall (as we fear we may) fall into the like diſtreſs.

6. We have ſaid, 'twere better the public ſhould keep the beggars, though they earned nothing, &c. But moſt men will laugh to hear us ſuppoſe, that any able to work (as indeed moſt beggars are, in one kind of meaſure or another) ſhould be kept without earning any thing. But we anſwer, that if there be but a certain proportion of work to be done, and that the ſame be already done by the non-beggars, then to employ the beggars about it, will but transfer the want from one hand to another; nor can a learner work ſo cheap as a ſkilful practiſed artiſt can. As for example, a practiſed ſpinner ſhall ſpin a pound of wool, worth two ſhillings, for ſix-pence; but a learner, undertaking it for three-pence, ſhall make the wool indeed into yarn, but not worth twelve-pence.

7. This little hint is the model of the greateſt work in the world, which is the making of England as conſiderable for trade as Holland; for there is but a certain proportion of trade in the world, and Holland is prepoſſeſſed of the greateſt part of it, and is thought to have more ſkill and experience to manage it. Wherefore to bring England into Holland's condition, as to this particular, is the ſame, as to ſend all the beggars about London into the Weſt Country to ſpin, where they ſhall only ſpoil the clothiers wool, and beggar the preſent ſpinners at beſt; but, at worſt, put the whole trade of the country to a ſtand, until the Hollander being more ready for it, have ſnapt that with the reſt.

8. My next obſervation is, that but few are murthered, viz. not above 86 of the 229250, which have died of other diſeaſes and caſualties; whereas in Paris few nights ſcape without their tragedy.

9. The reaſons of this we conceive to be two: one is the government and guard of the city by citizens themſelves, and that alternately; no man ſettling into a trade for that employment. And the other is the natural and cuſtomary abhorrence of that inhuman crime, and all bloodſhed, by moſt Engliſhmen: for of all, that are executed, few are for murther. Beſides, the great and frequent revolutions and changes in government ſince the year 1650, have been with little bloodſhed; the uſurpers themſelves having executed few in compariſon, upon the account of diſturbing their innovations.

10. In brief, when any dead body is found in England, no algebraiſt, or uncypherer of letters, can uſe more ſubtile ſuppoſitions and variety of conjectures to find out the demonſtration or cypher, than every common unconcerned perſon doth to find out the murtherers, and that for ever, until it be done.

11. The lunatics are alſo but few, viz. 158 in 229250, though I fear many more than are ſet down in our bills, few being entered for ſuch, but thoſe, who who die at Bethlehem; and there all ſeem to die of their lunacy, who died lunatics; for there is much difference in computing the number of lunatics, that die (though of fevers and all other diſeaſes, unto which lunacy is no ſuperſedeas) and thoſe, that die by reaſon of their madneſs.

12. So that, this caſualty being ſo uncertain, I ſhall not force myſelf to make any inference from the numbers and proportions we find in our bills concerning it: only I dare enſure any man at this preſent, well in his wits, for one in a thouſand, that he ſhall not die a lunatic in Bethlehem within theſe ſeven years, becauſe I find not above one in one thouſand five hundred have done ſo.

13. The like uſe may be made of the accounts of men, that made away themſelves, who are another ſort of mad-men, that think to eaſe themſelves of pain by leaping into hell; or elſe are yet more mad, ſo as to think there is no ſuch place; or that men may go to reſt by death, though they die in ſelf-murther, the greateſt ſin.

14. We ſhall ſay nothing of the numbers of thoſe, that have been drowned, killed by falls from ſcaffolds, or by carts running over them, &c. becauſe the ſame depends upon the caſual trade and employment of men, and upon matters, which are but circumſtantial to the ſeaſons and regions we live in, and affords little of that ſcience and certainty we aim at.

15. We find one caſualty in our bills, of which, though there be daily talk, there is little effect, much like our abhorrence of toads and ſnakes as moſt poiſonous creatures, whereas few men dare ſay upon their own knowledge they ever found harm by either; and this caſualty is the French pox, gotten, for the moſt part, not ſo much by the intemperate uſe of venery (which rather cauſeth the gout) as of many common women.

16. I ſay, the bills of mortality would take off theſe bars, which keep ſome men within bounds, as to theſe extravagances: for in the aforementioned 229250, we find not above 392 to have died of the pox. Now, foraſmuch as it is not good to let the world be lulled into a ſecurity and belief of impunity by our bills, which we intend ſhall not be only as deaths heads to put men in mind of their mortality, but alſo as Mercurial ſtatues to point out the moſt dangerous ways, that lead us into it and miſery; we ſhall therefore ſhew, that the pox is not as the toads and ſnakes aforementioned, but of a quite contrary nature, together with the reaſon why it appears otherwiſe.

17. Foraſmuch as by the ordinary diſcourſe of the world it ſeems a great part of men have, at one time or other, had ſome ſpecies of this diſeaſe, I wondering why ſo few died of it, eſpecially becauſe I could not take that to be ſo harmleſs, whereof ſo many complained very fiercely; upon enquiry, I found, that thoſe, who died of it out of the hoſpitals (eſpecially that of Kingſland, and the Lock in Southwark) were returned of ulcers and ſores. And in brief, I found, that all mentioned to die of the French pox were returned by the clerks of St. Giles's and St. Martin's in the Fields only, in which place I underſtood that moſt of the vileſt and moſt miſerable houſes of uncleanneſs were: from whence I concluded, that only hated perſons, and ſuch, whoſe very noſes were eaten off, were reported by the ſearchers to have died of this too frequent malady.

18. In

18. In the next place, it ſhall be examined, under what name or caſualty ſuch, as die of theſe diſeaſes are brought in: I ſay, under the conſumption; foraſmuch as all dying thereof die ſo emaciated and lean (their ulcers diſappearing upon death) that the old-women ſearchers, after the miſt of a cup of ale, and the bribe of a two-groat fee, inſtead of one, given them, cannot tell whether this emaciation or leanneſs were from a phthiſis, or from an hectic fever, atrophy, &c. or from an infection of the ſpermatic parts, which in length of time, and in various diſguiſes, hath at laſt vitiated the habit of the body, and by diſabling the parts to digeſt their nouriſhment, brought them to the condition of leanneſs abovementioned.

19. My next obſervation is, that of the rickets we find no mention among the caſualties, until the year 1634, and then but of 14 for that whole year.

20. Now the queſtion is, whether that diſeaſe did firſt appear about that time; or whether a diſeaſe, which had been long before, did then firſt receive its name?

21. To clear this difficulty out of the bills (for I dare venture on no deeper arguments) I enquired what other caſualty before the year 1634, named in the bills, was moſt like the rickets; and found, not only by pretenders to know it, but alſo from other bills, that livergrown was the neareſt. For in ſome years I find livergrown, ſpleen, and rickets, put all together, by reaſon (as I conceive) of their likeneſs to each other. Hereupon I added the livergrowns of the year 1634, viz. 77. to the rickets of the ſame year, viz. 14, making in all 91: which total, as alſo the number 77 itſelf, I compared with the livergrown of the precedent year 1633, viz. 82: all which ſhewed me, that the rickets was a new diſeaſe over and above.

22. Now, this being but a faint argument, I looked both forwards and backwards, and found, that in the year 1629, when no rickets appeared, there were but 94 livergrowns; and in the year 1636 there were 99 livergrown, although there were alſo 50 of the rickets: only this is not to be denied, that when the rickets grew very numerous (as in the year 1660, viz. 521) then there appeared not above 15 of livergrown.

23. In the year 1659 were 441 rickets, and 8 livergrown. In the year 1658 were 476 rickets, and 51 livergrown. Now, though it be granted, that theſe diſeaſes were confounded in the judgment of the nurſes, yet it is moſt certain, that the livergrown did never but once, viz. anno 1630 exceed 100; whereas anno 1660, livergrown and rickets were 536.

24. It is alſo to be obſerved, that the rickets were never more numerous than now, and that they are ſtill increaſing; for anno 1649, there were but 190, next year 260, next after that 329, and ſo forwards, with ſome little ſtarting backwards in ſome years, until the year 1660, which produced the greateſt of all.

25. Now, ſuch back-ſtartings ſeem to be univerſal in all things; for we do not only ſee in the progreſſive motion of the wheels of watches, and in the rowing of boats, that there is a little ſtarting or jerking backwards between every ſtep forwards, but alſo (if I am not much deceived) there appeared the like in the motion of the moon, which in the long teleſcopes at Greſham-college one may ſenſibly diſcern.

26. There ſeems alſo to be another new diſeaſe, called by our bills the ſtopping of the ſtomach, firſt mentioned in the year 1636; the which malady, from that year year to 1647, increaſed but from 6 to 29; anno 1655 it came to 145; in 57, to 277; in 60 to 314. Now theſe proportions far exceeding the difference of proportion generally ariſing from the increaſe of inhabitants, and from the reſort of advenæ to the city, ſhews, there is ſome new diſeaſe, which appeareth to the vulgar, as a ſtopping of the ſtomach.

27. Hereupon I apprehended, that this ſtopping might be the green-ſickneſs, foraſmuch as I find few or none to have been returned upon that account, although many be viſibly ſtained with it. Now, whether the ſame be forborn out of ſhame, I know not: for ſince the world believes, that marriage cures it, it may ſeem indeed a ſhame, that any maid ſhould die uncured, when there are more males than females, that is an overplus of huſbands to all that can be wives.

28. In the next place, I conjectured, that this ſtopping of the ſtomach might be the mother, foraſmuch as I have heard of many troubled with mother-fits (as they call them) although few returned to have died of them; which conjecture, if it be true, we may then ſafely ſay, that the mother-fits have alſo increaſed.

29. But I was ſomewhat taken off from thinking this ſtopping of the ſtomach to be the mother, becauſe I gueſſed rather the riſing of the lights might be it. For I remembred, that ſome women, troubled with the mother-fits, did complain of a choaking in their throats. Now, as I underſtand, it is more conceivable, that the lights or lungs (which I have heard called the bellows of the body) not blowing, that is, neither venting out, nor taking in breath, might rather cauſe ſuch a choaking, than that the mother ſhould riſe up thither, and do it. For methinks, when a woman is with child, there is a greater riſing, and yet no ſuch fits at all.

30. But what I have ſaid of the rickets and ſtopping of the ſtomach, I do in ſome meaſure ſay of the riſing of the lights alſo, viz. that theſe riſings (be they what they will) have increaſed much above the general proportion; for in 1629 there were but 44, and in 1660, 249, viz. almoſt ſix times as many.

31. Now foraſmuch as rickets appear much in the overgrowing of childrens livers and ſpleens (as by the bills may appear) which ſurely may cauſe ſtopping of the ſtomach, by ſqueezing and crowding upon that part; and foraſmuch as theſe choakings or riſings of the lights may proceed from the ſame ſtuffings, as make the liver and ſpleen to over-grow their due proportion; and laſtly, foraſmuch as the rickets, ſtopping of the ſtomach, and riſing of the lights, have all increaſed together, and in ſome kind of correſpondent proportions; it ſeems to me, that they depend one upon another; and that what is the rickets in children, may be the other in more grown bodies: for ſurely children, which recover of the rickets, may retain ſomewhat to cauſe what I have imagined. But of this let the learned phyſicians conſider, as I preſume they have.

32. I had not meddled thus far, but that I have heard, the firſt hints of the circulation of blood were taken from a common perſon's wondering what became of all the blood, which iſſued out of the heart ſince the heart beats above three thouſand times an hour, although but one drop ſhould be pump'd out of it at every ſtroke.

33. The ſtone ſeemed to decreaſe: for in 1632, 33, 34, 35, and 36, there died of the ſtone and ſtrangury 254; and in the years 1655, 56, 57, 58, 59, and 1660, but 250: which numbers, although indeed they be almoſt equal, yet conſidering the burials of the firſt named five years were but half thoſe of the latter, it ſeems to be decreaſed by about one half.

34. Now the ſtone and ſtrangury are diſeaſes, which moſt men know, that feel them, unleſs it be in ſome few caſes, where (as I have heard phyſicians ſay) a ſtone is held up by the films of the bladder, and ſo kept from grating or offending it.

35. The gout ſtands much at a ſtay, that is, it anſwers the general proportion of burials: there dies not above one of 1000 of the gout, although I believe that more die gouty. The reaſon is, becauſe thoſe, that have the gout, are ſaid to be long livers; and therefore, when ſuch die, they are returned as aged.

36. The ſcurvy hath likewiſe increaſed, and that gradually from 12, anno 1629, to 95, anno 1660.

37. The tiſick ſeems to be quite worn away; but that it is probable the ſame is entred as cough or conſumption.

38. Agues and fevers are entred promiſcuouſly, yet in the few bills, wherein they have been diſtinguiſhed, it appears that not above 1 in 40 of the whole are agues.

39. The abortives and ſtillborn are about the twentieth part of thoſe, that are chriſtned; and the numbers ſeemed the ſame thirty years ago as now, which ſhews there were more in proportion in thoſe years than now; or elſe, that in theſe latter years due accounts have not been kept of the abortives, as having been buried without notice, and perhaps not in church-yards.

40. For that there hath been a neglect in the accounts of the chriſtnings is moſt certain, becauſe until the year 1642, we find the burials but equal with the chriſtnings, or near thereabouts; but in 1648, when the differences in religion had changed the government, the chriſtnings were but two thirds of the burials. And in the year 1659, not half, viz. the burials were 14720 (of the plague but 36) and the chriſtnings were but 5670; which great diſproportion could be from no other cauſe than that abovementioned, foraſmuch as the ſame grew as the confuſions and changes grew.

41. Moreover, although the bills give us in anno 1659 but 5670 chriſtnings, yet they give us 421 abortives, and 226 dying in child-bed; whereas in the year 1631, when the abortives were 410, that is, near the number of the year 1659, the chriſtnings were 8288. Wherefore by the proportion of abortives, anno 1659, the chriſtnings ſhould have been about 8500: but if we ſhall reckon by the women dying in childbed, of whom a better account is kept than of ſtillborns and abortives, we ſhall find anno 1659. there were 226 childbeds; and anno 1631, 112, viz. not $\frac{1}{2}$. Wherefore I conceive, that the true number of the chriſtnings, anno 1659, is above double to the 5690 ſet down in our bills; that is, about 11500, and then the chriſtnings will come near the ſame proportion to the burials, as hath been obſerved in former times.

42. In regular times, when accounts were well kept, we find, that not above three in 200 died in childbed, and that the number of abortives was about treble to that of the women dying in childbed: from whence we may probably collect, that not one woman of an hundred (I may ſay of two hundred) dies in her labour; foraſmuch as there be other cauſes of a woman's dying within the month, than the hardneſs of her labour.

43. If

43. If this be true in theſe countries, where women hinder the facility of their child-bearing by affected ſtraitnings of their bodies; then certainly in America, where the ſame is not practiſed, nature is little more to be taxed as to women, than in brutes, among whom not one in ſome thouſands do die of their deliveries. What I have heard of the Iriſh women confirms me herein.

44. Before we quite leave this matter, we ſhall inſert the cauſes, why the account of chriſtnings hath been neglected more than that of burials: one, and the chief whereof, was a religious opinion againſt baptizing of infants either as unlawful, or unneceſſary. If this were the only reaſon, we might by our defects of this kind conclude the growth of this opinion, and pronounce, that not half the people of England, between the years 1650 and 1660, were convinced of the need of baptizing.

45. A ſecond reaſon was, the ſcruples, which many public miniſters would make of the worthineſs of parents to have their children baptized, which forced ſuch queſtioned parents, who did alſo not believe the neceſſity of having their children baptized by ſuch ſcruplers, to carry their children unto ſuch other miniſters, as having performed the thing, had not the authority or command of the regiſter to enter the names of the baptized.

46. A third reaſon was, that a little fee was to be paid for the regiſtry.

47. Upon the whole matter it is moſt certain, that the number of heterodox believers was very great between the ſaid year 1650 and 1660; and ſo peeviſh were they, as not to have the births of their children regiſtred, although thereby the time of their coming of age might be known, in reſpect of ſuch inheritances, as might belong unto them; and withal, by ſuch regiſtring it would have appeared unto what pariſh each child had belonged, in caſe any of them ſhould happen to want its relief.

48. Of convulſions there appeared very few, viz. but 52 in the year 1629, which in 1636 grew to 709, keeping about that ſtay till 1659, though ſometimes riſing to about 1000.

49. It is to be noted, that from 1629 to 1636, when the convulſions were but few, the number of chriſoms and infants was greater: for in 1629, there were of chriſoms and infants 2596, and of the convulſion 52, viz. of both 2648. And in 1636 there were of infants 1895, and of the convulſions 709; in both 2604, by which it appears, that this difference is likely to be only a confuſion in the accounts.

50. Moreover, we find that for theſe later years, ſince 1636, the total of convulſions and chriſoms added together are much leſs, viz. by about 400 or 500 per annum, than the like totals from 1629 to 36; which makes me think, that teeth alſo were thruſt in under the title of chriſoms and infants, inaſmuch as in the ſaid years, from 1629 to 1636, the number of worms and teeth wants by above 400 per annum of what we find in following years.

CHAP.

CHAP. IV.

Of the plague.

1. BEFORE we leave to diſcourſe of the caſualties, we ſhall add ſomething concerning that greateſt diſeaſe or caſualty of all, the plague.

There have been in London, within this age, four times of great mortality, that is to ſay, the years 1592 and 1593, 1603, 1625, and 1636.

There died anno 1592, from March to December	25886
Whereof, of the plague	11503
Anno 1593	17844
Whereof of the plague	10662
Chriſtned in the ſaid year	4021
Anno 1603, within the ſame ſpace of time, were buried	37294
Whereof of the plague	30561
Anno 1625, within the ſame ſpace	51758
Whereof of the plague	35417
Anno 1636, from April to December	23359
Whereof of the plague	10460

2. Now it is manifeſt of itſelf, in which of theſe years moſt died; but in which of them was the greateſt mortality of all diſeaſes in general, or of the plague in particular, we diſcover thus. In the years 1592, and 1636, we find the proportion of thoſe dying of the plague in the whole to be near alike, that is, about 10 to 23, or 11 to 25, or as about 2 to 5.

3. In the year 1625, we find the plague to bear unto the whole in proportion as 35 to 51, or 7 to 10, that is, almoſt the triplicate of the former proportion; for the cube of 7 being 343, and the cube of 10 being 1000, the ſaid 343 is not $\frac{1}{3}$ of 1000.

4. In anno 1603, the proportion of the plague to the whole was as 30 to 37, viz. as 4 to 5, which is yet greater than the laſt of 7 to 10: for if the year 1625 had been as great a plague year as 1603, there muſt have died not only 7 to 10, but 8 to 10, which in thoſe great numbers makes a vaſt difference.

5. We muſt therefore conclude the year 1603 to have been the greateſt plague year of this age.

6. Now to know in which of theſe four was the greateſt mortality at large, we reaſon thus:

Anno	Buried	26490	or	6
1592	Chriſtned	4277	as	1
Anno	There died in the whole year of all	38244	or	8
1603	Chriſtned	4784	as	1

7. From whence it appears, that anno 1636, the chriſtnings were about $\frac{3}{5}$ parts of the burials: anno 1592 but $\frac{1}{6}$; but in the year 1603, and 1625, not above an eighth: ſo that the ſaid two years were the years of greateſt mortality. We ſaid that the year 1603 was the greateſt plague year. And now we ſay, that the ſame was not a greater year of mortality than anno 1625. Now to reconcile theſe two poſitions, we muſt alledge, that anno 1625, there was an error in the accounts or diſtinctions of the caſualties; that is, more died of the plague than were recounted for under that name. Which allegation we alſo prove thus, viz.

8. In the ſaid year 1625 there are ſaid to have died of the plague 35417, and of all other diſeaſes 18848; whereas in the years, both before and after the ſame, the ordinary number of burials was between 7 and 8000; ſo that if we add about 11000 (which is the difference between 7 and 18) to our 35, the whole will be 46000, which bears to the whole 54000, as about 4 to 5, thereby rendering the ſaid year 1625 to be as great a plague year as that of 1603, and no greater; which anſwers to what we proved before, viz. that the mortality of the two years was equal.

9. From whence we may probably ſuſpect, that about $\frac{1}{4}$ part more died of the plague than are returned for ſuch; which we further prove by noting, that anno 1636 there died 10400 of the plague, the $\frac{1}{4}$ whereof is 2600. Now there are ſaid to have died of all other diſeaſes that year 12959, out of which number deducting 2600, there remain 10359, more than which there died not in ſeveral years next before and after the ſaid year 1636.

10. The next obſervation we ſhall offer is, that the plague of 1603 laſted eight years. In ſome whereof there died above 4000, in others above 2000, and in but one fewer than 600: whereas in the year 1624 next preceding, and in the year 1626 next following the ſaid great plague year 1625, there died in the former but 11, and in the latter but 134 of the plague. Moreover, in the ſaid year 1625, the plague decreaſed from its utmoſt number 4461 a week, to below 1000 within ſix weeks.

11. The plague of 1636 laſted twelve years, in eight whereof there died 2000 per annum one with another, and never under 300. The which ſhews, that the contagion of the plague depends more upon the diſpoſition of the air, than upon the effluvia from the bodies of men.

12. Which alſo we prove by the ſuddain jumps, which the plague hath made, leaping in one week from 118 to 927; and back again from 993 to 258; and from thence again the very next week to 852. The which effects muſt ſurely be rather attributed to change of the air, than of the conſtitution of men's bodies, otherwiſe than as this depends upon that.

13. It may be alſo noted, that many times other peſtilential diſeaſes, as purple-fevers, ſmall-pox, &c. do fore-run the plague a year, two or three; for in 1622 there died but 8000: in 1623, 11000: in 1624, about 12000: till in 1625 there died of all diſeaſes above 54000.

CHAP. V.

Other obſervations upon the plague, and caſualties.

1. THE decreaſe and increaſe of people is to be reckoned chiefly by chriſtnings, becauſe few bear children in London but inhabitants, though others die there. The accounts of chriſtnings were well kept, until differences in religion occaſioned ſome neglect therein, although even theſe neglects we muſt confeſs to have been regular and proportionable.

2. By the numbers and proportions of chriſtnings, therefore, we obſerve as followeth, viz.

Firſt, that, when from December 1602, to March following, there was little or no plague, then the chriſtnings at a medium were between 110 and 130 per week, few weeks being above the one, or below the other; but when from thence to July the plague increaſed, that then the chriſtnings decreaſed to under 90.

Secondly, the queſtion is, whether teeming-women died, or fled, or miſcarried? The latter at this time ſeems moſt probable, becauſe even in the ſaid ſpace between March and July, there died not above 20 per week of the plague: which ſmall number could neither cauſe the death or flight of ſo many women, as to alter the proportion $\frac{1}{4}$ part lower.

3. Moreover, we obſerve from the 21 of July to the 12 of October, the plague increaſing reduced the chriſtnings to 70 at a medium, diminiſhing the above proportion down to $\frac{2}{5}$. Now the cauſe of this muſt be flying, and death, as well as miſcarriages and abortions; for there died within that time about 25000, whereof many were certainly women-with-child: beſides, the fright of ſo many dying within ſo ſmall a time, might drive away ſo many others, as to cauſe this effect.

4. From December 1624, to the middle of April 1625, there died not above five a week of the plague, one with another. In this time, the chriſtnings were one with another 180. The which decreaſed gradually by the 22d of September to 75, or from the proportion of 12 to 5, which evidently ſquares with our former obſervation.

5. The next obſervation we ſhall offer is, the time, wherein the city hath been re-peopled after a great plague; which we affirm to be by the ſecond year. For in 1627 the chriſtnings (which are our ſtandard in this caſe) were 8408, which in 1624, next preceding the plague-year 1625 (that had ſwept away above 54000) were but 8299; and the chriſtnings of 1626 (which were but 6701) mounted in one year to the ſaid 8408.

6. Now the cauſe hereof, foraſmuch as it cannot be a ſupply by procreation; ergo, it muſt be by new affluxes to London out of the country.

7. We might fortify this aſſertion by ſhewing, that before the plague-year 1603, the chriſtnings were about 6000, which were in that very year reduced to 4789, but crept up the next year 1604 to 5458, recovering their former ordinary proportion proportion in 1605 of 6504, about which proportion it ſtood till the year 1610.

8. I ſay it followeth, that let the mortality be what it will, the city repairs its loſs of inhabitants within two years; which obſervation leſſens the objection made againſt the value of houſes in London, as if they were liable to great prejudice through the loſs of inhabitants by the plague.

CHAP. VI.

Of the ſicklineſs, healthfulneſs, and fruitfulneſs of ſeaſons.

1. HAVING ſpoken of caſualties, we come next to compare the ſicklineſs, healthfulneſs, and fruitfulneſs of the ſeveral years and ſeaſons one with another. And firſt, having in the chapters aforegoing mentioned the ſeveral years of plague, we ſhall next preſent the ſeveral other ſickly years; we meaning by a ſickly year ſuch, wherein the burials exceed thoſe both of the precedent and ſubſequent years, and not above two hundred dying of the plague, for ſuch we call plague years; and this we do, that the world may ſee, by what ſpaces and intervals we may hereafter expect ſuch times again. Now, we may not call that a more ſickly year, wherein more die, becauſe ſuch exceſs of burials may proceed from increaſe and acceſs of people to the city only.

2. Such ſickly years were 1618, 20, 23, 24, 1632, 33, 34, 1649, 52, 54, 56, 58, 61, as may be ſeen by the tables.

3. In reference to this obſervation we ſhall preſent another, namely, that the more ſickly the years are, the leſs fecund or fruitful of children alſo they be. Which will appear, if the number of children born in the ſaid ſickly years be leſs than that of the years both next preceding and next following: all which, upon view of the tables, will be found true, except in a very few caſes, where ſometimes the precedent and ſometimes the ſubſequent years vary a little, but never both together. Moreover, for the confirmation of this truth, we preſent you the year 1660, where the burials were fewer than in either of the two next precedent years by 2000, and fewer than in the ſubſequent by above 4000. And withal, the number of chriſtnings in the ſaid year 1660 was far greater than in any of the three years next aforegoing.

4. As to this year 1660, although we would not be thought ſuperſtitious, yet it is not to be neglected, that in the ſaid year was the King's reſtoration to his empire over theſe three nations, as if God Almighty had cauſed the healthfulneſs and fruitfulneſs thereof to repair the bloodſhed and calamities ſuffered in his abſence. I ſay, this conceit doth abundantly counterpoiſe the opinion of thoſe, who think great plagues come in with Kings reigns, becauſe it happened ſo twice, viz. anno 1603, and 1625; whereas as well the year 1648, wherein the preſent King commenced his right to reign, as alſo the year 1660, wherein he commenced the exerciſe of the ſame, were both eminently healthful: which clears both monarchy, and our preſent King's family, from what ſeditious men have ſurmiſed againſt them.

5. The

5. The diſeaſes, which beſide the plague make years unhealthful in this city, are ſpotted-fevers, ſmall-pox, dyſentery, called by ſome the plague in the guts; and the unhealthful ſeaſon is the autumn.

CHAP. VII.

Of the difference between burials and chriſtnings.

1. THE next obſervation is, that in the ſaid bills there are far more burials than chriſtnings. This is plain, depending only upon arithmetical computation; for, in 40 years, from the year 1603, to the year 1644, excluſive of both years, there have been ſet down (as happening within the ſame ground, ſpace, or pariſhes) although differently numbered and divided, 363935 burials, and but 330747 chriſtnings within the 97, 16, and 10 out-pariſhes; thoſe of Weſtminſter, Lambeth, Newington, Rotherhith, Stepney, Hackney and Iſlington, not being included.

2. From this ſingle obſervation it will follow, that London ſhould have decreaſed in its people; the contrary whereof we ſee by its daily increaſe of buildings upon new foundations, and by the turning of great palacious houſes into ſmall tenements. It is therefore certain, that London is ſupplied with people from out of the country, whereby not only to ſupply the overplus differences of burials abovementioned, but likewiſe to increaſe its inhabitants according to the ſaid increaſe of houſing.

3. This ſupplying of London ſeems to be the reaſon, why Wincheſter, Lincoln, and ſeveral other cities have decreaſed in their buildings, and conſequently in their inhabitants. The ſame may be ſuſpected of many towns in Cornwal, and other places, which probably, when they were firſt allowed to ſend burgeſſes to the parliament, were more populous than now, and bore another proportion to London than now; for ſeveral of thoſe boroughs ſend two burgeſſes, whereas London itſelf ſends but four, although it bears the fifteenth part of the charge of the whole nation in all public taxes and levies.

4. But, if we conſider what I have upon exact enquiry found true, viz. that in the country, within ninety years, there have been 6339 chriſtnings, and but 5280 burials, the increaſe of London will be ſalved, without inferring the decreaſe of the people in the country; and withal, in caſe all England have but fourteen times more people than London, it will appear, how the ſaid increaſe of the country may increaſe the people, both of London and itſelf; for if there be in the 97, 16, 10, and 7 pariſhes, uſually comprehended within our bills, but 460000 ſouls, as hereafter we ſhall ſhew; then there are in all England and Wales 6440000 perſons, out of which ſubtract 460000, for thoſe in and about London, there remain 5980000 in the country, the which increaſing about $\frac{1}{7}$ part in 40 years, as we ſhall hereafter prove doth happen in the country, the whole increaſe of the country will be about 854000 in the ſaid time; out of which number, if but about 250000 be ſent up to London in the ſaid 40 years, viz. about 6000 per annum, the ſaid miſſions will make good the alterations, which we find to have been in and about London, between tween the years 1603 and 1644 abovementioned: but that 250000 will do the ſame, I prove thus: viz. in the 8 years from 1603 to 1612, the burials in all the pariſhes, and of all diſeaſes, the plague included, were at a medium 9750 per annum. And between 1635 and 1644 were 18000, the difference whereof is 8250, which is the total of the increaſe of the burials in 40 years, that is, about 206 per annum. Now, to make the burials increaſe 206 per annum, there muſt be added to the city 30 times as many (according to the proportion of 3 dying out of 11 families) viz. 6180 advenæ, the which number multiplied again by the 40 years, makes the product 247200, which is leſs than the 250000 above-propounded; ſo as there remain above 600000 of increaſe in the country within the ſaid 40 years, either to render it more populous, or ſend forth into other colonies, or wars. But that England hath fourteen times more people, is not improbable, for the reaſons following.

1. London is obſerved to bear about the fifteenth proportion of the whole tax.

2. There are in England and Wales about 39000 ſquare miles of land; and we have computed, that in one of the greateſt pariſhes in Hantſhire, being alſo a market-town, and containing twelve ſquare miles, there are 220 ſouls in every ſquare mile, out of which I abate $\frac{1}{4}$ for the overplus of people more in the pariſh than in other wild counties. So as the $\frac{3}{4}$ parts of the ſaid 220, multiplied by the total of ſquare miles, produces 6400000 ſouls in all, London included.

3. There are about 10000 pariſhes in England and Wales, and which, although they ſhould not contain the $\frac{1}{3}$ part of the land, nor the $\frac{1}{4}$ of the people of that country-pariſh, which we have examined, yet may be ſuppoſed to contain about 600 people, one with another: according to which account there will be ſix millions of people in the nation. I might add, that there are in England and Wales about five and twenty millions of acres at 16½ foot to the perch; and if there be ſix millions of people, then there is about four acres for every head, which how well it agrees to the rules of plantation, I leave unto others, not only as a means to examine my aſſertion, but as a hint to their enquiry concerning the fundamental trade, which is huſbandry and plantation.

4. Upon the whole matter we may therefore conclude, that the people of the whole nation do increaſe, and conſequently the decreaſe of Wincheſter, Lincoln, and other like places, muſt be attributed to other reaſons, than that of re-furniſhing London only.

5. We come to ſhew, why, although in the country the chriſtnings exceed the burials, yet in London they do not. The general reaſon of this muſt be, that in London the proportion of thoſe ſubject to die, unto thoſe capable of breeding, is greater than in the country; that is, let there be an hundred perſons in London, and as many in the country; we ſay, that if there be ſixty of them breeders in London, there are more than ſixty in the country, or elſe we muſt ſay, that London is more unhealthful, or that it inclines men and women more to barrenneſs, than the country: which by comparing the burials and chriſtnings of Hackney, Newington, and the other country pariſhes, with the moſt ſmoky and ſtinking parts of the city, is ſcarce diſcernible in any conſiderable degree.

6. Now that the breeders in London are proportionably fewer than thoſe in the country, ariſes from theſe reaſons, viz.

1. All, that have buſineſs to the court of the King, or to the courts of juſtice, and all country-men coming up to bring proviſions to the city, or to buy foreign commodities, manufactures, and rarities, do for the moſt part leave their wives in the country.

2. Perſons coming to live in London out of curioſity and pleaſure, as alſo ſuch as would retire and live privately, do the ſame, if they have any.

3. Such as come up to be cured of diſeaſes do ſcarce uſe their wives pro tempore.

4. That many apprentices of London, who are bound ſeven or nine years from marriage, do often ſtay longer voluntarily.

5. That many ſea-men of London leave their wives behind them, who are more ſubject to die in the abſence of their huſbands, than to breed either without men, or with the uſe of many promiſcuouſly.

6. As for unhealthineſs, it may well be ſuppoſed, that although ſeaſoned bodies may, and do live near as long in London, as elſewhere, yet new-comers and children do not: for the ſmoaks, ſtinks, and cloſe air, are leſs healthful than that of the country. Otherwiſe why do ſickly perſons remove into the country-air? and why are there more old men in countries than in London per rata? And although the difference in Hackney and Newington abovementioned be not very notorious, yet the reaſon may be their vicinity to London, and that the inhabitants are moſt ſuch, whoſe bodies have firſt been impaired with the London-air, before they withdraw thither.

7. As to the cauſes of barrenneſs in London, I ſay, that although there ſhould be none extraordinary in the native air of the place; yet the intemperance in feeding, and eſpecially the adulteries and fornications, ſuppoſed more frequent in London than elſewhere, do certainly hinder breeding. For a woman, admitting ten men, is ſo far from having ten times as many children, that ſhe hath none at all.

8. Add to this, that the minds of men in London are more thoughtful, and full of buſineſs, than in the country, where their work is corporal labour and exerciſes; all which promote breeding, whereas anxieties of the mind hinder it.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the difference between the numbers of males and females.

THE next obſervation is, that there be more males than females.

1. There have been buried from the year 1628, to the year 1662, excluſive, 209436 males, and but 190474 females. But it will be objected, that in London it may be indeed ſo, though otherwiſe elſewhere; becauſe London is the great ſtage and ſhop of buſineſs, wherein the maſculine ſex bears the greateſt part. But we anſwer, that there have been alſo chriſtned within the ſame time 139782 males, and but 130866 females, and that the country accounts are conſonant enough to thoſe of London upon this matter.

2. What the cauſes hereof are, we ſhall not trouble ourſelves to conjecture, as in other caſes: only we ſhall deſire, that travellers would enquire, whether it be the ſame in other countries.

3. We ſhould have given an account, how in every age theſe proportions change here, but that we have bills of diſtinction but for 32 years; ſo that we ſhall paſs from hence to ſome inferences from this concluſion; as firſt,

I. That Chriſtian religion, prohibiting polygamy, is more agreeable to the law of nature, that is, the law of GOD, than Mahometiſm, and others, that allow it: for one man's having many women, or wives, by law, ſignifies nothing, unleſs there were many women to one man in nature alſo.

II. The obvious objection hereunto is, that one horſe, bull, or ram, having each of them many females, do promote increaſe. To which I anſwer, that although perhaps there be naturally, even of theſe ſpecies, more males than females; yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen, and weathers, there are fewer. From whence it will follow, that when by experience it is found how many ews (ſuppoſe twenty) one ram will ſerve, we may know what proportion of male-lambs to caſtrate or geld, viz. nineteen, or thereabouts: for if you emaſculate fewer, viz. but ten, you ſhall, by promiſcuous copulation of each of thoſe ten with two females, hinder the increaſe, ſo far as the admittance of two males will do it: but, if you caſtrate none at all, it is highly probable, that every of the twenty males copulating with every of the twenty females, there will be little or no conception in any of them all.

III. And this I take to be the trueſt reaſon, why foxes, wolves, and other vermin animals, that are not gelt, increaſe not faſter than ſheep, when as ſo many thouſands of theſe are daily butchered, and very few of the other die otherwiſe than of themſelves.

4. We have hitherto ſaid, there are more males than females; we ſay next, that the one exceed the other by about a thirteenth part. So that although more men die violent deaths than women, that is, more are ſlain in wars, killed by miſchance, drowned at ſea, and die by the hand of juſtice; moreover, more men go to colonies, and travel into foreign parts, than women; and laſtly, more remain unmarried than of women, as fellows of colleges, and apprentices above eighteen, &c. yet the ſaid thirteenth part difference bringeth the buſineſs but to ſuch a paſs, that every woman may have a huſband, without the allowance of polygamy.

5. Moreover, although a man be prolific forty years, and a woman but five and twenty, which makes the males to be as 560 to 325 females; yet the cauſes above-named, and the later marriage of the men, reduce all to an equality.

6. It appearing, that there were fourteen men to thirteen women, and that they die in the ſame proportion alſo; yet I have heard phyſicians ſay, that they have two women patients to one man: which aſſertion ſeems very likely; for that women have either the green-ſickneſs, or other like diſtempers, are ſick of breedings, abortions, child-bearing, ſore-breaſts, whites, obſtructions, fits of the mother, and the like.

7. Now, from this it ſhould follow, that more women ſhould die than men, if the number of burials anſwered in proportion to that of ſickneſſes: but this muſt be ſalved, either by the alledging, that the phyſicians cure thoſe ſickneſſes, ſo as few more die than if none were ſick; or elſe that men being more intemperate than women, die as much by reaſon of their vices, as women do by the infirmity of their ſex; and conſequently, more males being born than females, more alſo die.

8. In the year 1642 many males went out of London into the wars then beginning, insomuch as I expected in the succeeding year 1643 to have found the burials of females to have exceeded those of males: but no alteration appeared; forasmuch, as I suppose, trading continuing the same in London, all those, who lost their apprentices, had others out of the country; and if any left their trades and shops, that others forthwith succeeded them: for, if employment for hands remain the same, no doubt but the number of them could not long continue in disproportion.

9. Another pregnant argument to the same purpose (which hath already been touched on) is, that although in the very year of the plague the christnings decreased, by the dying and flying of teeming-women, yet the very next year after they increased somewhat, but the second after to as full a number as in the second year before the said plague. For I say again, if there be encouragement for an hundred in London, that is, a way how an hundred may live better than in the country, and if there be void housing there to receive them, the evacuating of a fourth or a third part of that number must soon be supplied out of the country; so as the great plague doth not lessen the inhabitants of the city, but of the country, who in a short time remove themselves from thence hither, so long, until the city, for want of receipt and encouragement, regurgitates and sends them back.

10. From the difference between males and females, we see the reason of making eunuchs in those places where polygamy is allowed; the latter being useless as to multiplication, without the former, as was said before in case of sheep and other animals usually gelt in these countries.

11. By consequence, this practice of castration serves as well to promote increase, as to meliorate the flesh of those beasts that suffer it. For that operation is equally practised upon horses, which are not used for food, as upon those that are.

12. In popish countries, where polygamy is forbidden, if a greater number of males oblige themselves to celibate, than the natural over-plus, or difference between them and females amounts unto; then multiplication is hindered: for if there be eight men to ten women, all of which eight men are married to eight of the ten women, then the other two bear no children, as either admitting no man at all, or else admitting men as whores (that is, more than one;) which commonly procreates no more than if none at all had been used: or else such unlawful copulations beget conceptions, but to frustrate them by procured abortions, or secret murthers; all which returns to the same reckoning. Now, if the same proportion of women oblige themselves to a single life likewise, then such obligation makes no change in this matter of increase.

13. From what hath been said appears the reason, why the law is and ought to be so strict against fornications and adulteries: for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best.

14. Now forasmuch as princes are not only powerful, but rich, according to the number of their people (hands being the father, as lands are the mother and womb of wealth) it is no wonder, why states, by encouraging marriage, and hindering licentiousness, advance their own interest, as well as preserve the laws of God from contempt and violation.

15. It is a bleſſing to mankind, that by this overplus of males there is this natural bar to polygamy: for in ſuch a ſtate women could not live in that parity and equality of expence with their huſbands, as now, and here they do.

16. The reaſon whereof is, not that the huſband cannot maintain as ſplendidly three as one; for he might, having three wives, live himſelf upon a quarter of his income, that is, in a parity with all three, as well as, having but one, live in the ſame parity at half with her alone: but rather, becauſe that to keep them all quiet with each other, and himſelf, he muſt keep them all in greater awe, and leſs ſplendor; which power he having, he will probably uſe it to keep them all as low as he pleaſes, and at no more coſt than makes for his own pleaſure; the pooreſt ſubjects (ſuch as this plurality of wives muſt be) being moſt eaſily governed.

CHAP. IX.

Of the growth of the city.

1. IN the year 1593 there died in the ninety ſeven pariſhes within the walls, and the ſixteen without the walls (beſides 421 of the plague) 3508. And the next year 3478, beſides 29 of the plague: in both years 6986. Twenty years after there died in the ſame ninety ſeven, and ſixteen pariſhes, 12110, viz. anno 1614, 5873; and anno 1615, 6237: ſo as the ſaid pariſhes are increaſed, in the ſaid time, from ſeven to twelve, or very near thereabouts.

2. Moreover, the burials within the like ſpace of the next twenty years, viz. anno 1634 and 1635, were 15625, viz. as about twenty four to thirty one: the which laſt of the three numbers, 15625, is much more than double to the firſt 6986; viz. the ſaid pariſhes have in forty years increaſed from twenty three to fifty two.

3. Where is to be noted, that although we were neceſſitated to compound the ſaid ninety ſeven with the ſixteen pariſhes, yet the ſixteen pariſhes have increaſed faſter than the ninety ſeven. For, in the year 1620, there died within the walls 2726, and in 1660 there died but 3098 (both years being clear of the plague:) ſo as in this forty years the ſaid ninety ſeven pariſhes have increaſed but from nine to ten, or thereabouts, becauſe the houſing of the ſaid ninety ſeven pariſhes could be no otherwiſe increaſed, than by turning great houſes into tenements, and building upon a few gardens.

4. In the year 1604 there died in the ninety ſeven pariſhes 1518, and of the plague 280. And in the year 1660, 3098, and none of the plague; ſo as in fifty ſix years the ſaid pariſhes have doubled. Where note, that foraſmuch as the ſaid year 1604 was the very next after the great plague 1603 (when the city was not yet re-peopled) we ſhall rather make the compariſen between 2014, which died anno 1605, and 3431 anno 1659; chuſing rather from hence to aſſert, that the ſaid ninety ſeven and ſixteen pariſhes increaſed from twenty to thirty four, or from ten to ſeventeen in fifty four years, than from one to two in fifty ſix, as in the laſt aforegoing paragraph is ſet down.

5. Anno 1605 there died in the ſixteen out-pariſhes 2974, and anno 1659, 6988: ſo as in the fifty four years the ſaid pariſhes have increaſed from three to ſeven.

6. Anno 1605 there died in the eight out-pariſhes 960, anno 1659 there died in the ſame ſcope of ground, although called now ten pariſhes (the Savoy and Covent-Garden being added) 4301: ſo as the ſaid pariſhes have increaſed, within the ſaid fifty four years, more than from one to four.

7. Moreover, there were buried in all, anno 1605, 5948, and anno 1659, 14720, viz. about two to five.

8. Having ſet down the proportions, wherein we find the ſaid three great diviſions of the whole pile, called London, to have increaſed; we come next to ſhew what particular pariſhes have had the moſt remarkable ſhare in theſe augmentations, viz. of the ninety ſeven pariſhes within the walls the increaſe is not diſcernible, but where great houſes, formerly belonging to noblemen, before they built others near White-hall, have been turned into tenements; upon which account Allhallows upon the Wall is increaſed by the converſion of the Marquis of Wincheſter's houſe, lately the Spaniſh ambaſſador's, into a new ſtreet: the like of Alderman FREEMAN's, and LA MOTTE's, near the Exchange: the like of the Earl of Arundel's in Lothbury: the like of the Biſhop of London's palace, the Dean of Paul's, and the Lord Rivers's houſe now in hand; as alſo of the Duke's-Place, and others heretofore.

9. Of the ſixteen pariſhes, next without the walls, St. Giles Cripplegate hath been moſt enlarged, next to that St. Olaves Southwark; then St. Andrew's Holborn, then White-Chapel; the difference in the reſt not being conſiderable.

10. Of the out-pariſhes, now called ten, formerly nine, and before that eight, St. Giles's and St. Martins in the Fields are moſt increaſed, notwithſtanding St. Paul's Covent-Garden was taken out of them both.

11. The general obſervation, which ariſes from hence, is, that the city of London gradually removes weſtward; and did not the Royal-Exchange and London-Bridge ſtay the trade, it would remove much faſter: for Leaden-Hall-ſtreet, Biſhop's-Gate, and part of Fen-Church-ſtreet, have loſt their antient trade; Grace-Church-ſtreet indeed keeping itſelf yet entire, by reaſon of its conjunction with, and relation to London Bridge.

12. Again, Canning-ſtreet and Watlin-ſtreet have loſt their trade of woollen-drapery to Paul's Church-Yard, Ludgate-hill, and Fleet-ſtreet. The mercery is gone from out of Lombard-ſtreet and Cheap-ſide into Pater-Noſter-Row and Fleet-ſtreet.

13. The reaſons whereof are, that the King's court (in old times frequently kept in the city) is now always at Weſtminſter. Secondly, the uſe of coaches, whereunto the narrow ſtreets of the old city are unfit, hath cauſed the building of thoſe broader ſtreets in Covent-Garden, &c.

14. Thirdly, where the conſumption of a commodity is, viz. among the gentry, the venders of the ſame muſt ſeat themſelves.

15. Fourthly. the cramming up of the void ſpaces and gardens within the walls with houſes, to the prejudice of light and air, hath made men build new ones, where they leſs fear thoſe inconveniences.

16. Con-

16. Conformity in building to other civil nations hath diſpoſed us to let our old wooden dark houſes fall to decay, and to build new ones, whereby to anſwer all the ends abovementioned.

17. Where note, that when Lud-gate was the only weſtern gate of the city, little building was weſtward thereof: but, when Holborn began to increaſe, New-gate was made. But now both theſe gates are not ſufficient for the communication between the walled city, and its enlarged weſtern ſuburbs, as daily appears by the intolerable ſtops and embarraſſes of coaches near both theſe gates, eſpecially Lud-gate.

CHAP. X.

Of the inequality of pariſhes.

1. BEFORE we paſs from hence, we ſhall offer to conſideration the inequality of pariſhes in and about London, evident in the proportion of their reſpective burials; for in the ſame year were buried in Cripplegate pariſh 1191, that but twelve died in Trinity Minories, St. Saviour's Southwark, and Botolph's Biſhop's-gate, being of the middle ſize, as burying 5 and 600 per annum: ſo that Cripplegate is an hundred times as big as the Minories, and 200 times as big as St. John the Evangeliſt's, Mary-Coal-Church, Bennet's-Grace-Church, Matthew-Friday-ſtreet, and ſome others within the city.

2. Hence may ariſe this queſtion, wherefore ſhould this inequality be continued? If it be anſwered, becauſe that paſtors of all ſorts and ſizes of abilities may have benefices, each man according to his merit; we anſwer, that a two hundredth part of the beſt parſon's learning is ſcarce enough for a ſexton. But beſides, there ſeems no reaſon of any difference at all, it being as much ſcience to ſave one ſingle ſoul, as one thouſand.

3. We incline therefore to think the pariſhes ſhould be equal, or near, becauſe, in the reformed religions, the principal uſe of churches is to preach in. Now the bigneſs of ſuch a church ought to be no greater, than that unto which the voice of a preacher of middling lungs will eaſily extend; I ſay eaſily, becauſe they ſpeak an hour or more together.

4. The uſe of ſuch large churches as Paul's, is now wholly loſt, we having no need of ſaying perhaps fifty maſſes all at one time; nor of making thoſe grand proceſſions frequent in the Romiſh church; nor is the ſhape of our cathedral proper at all for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre with galleries, gradually overlooking each other: for unto this condition the pariſh-churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them.

5. Moreover, if pariſhes were brought to the ſize of Coalman-ſtreet, Allhallows-Barking, Chriſt-Church, Black-Friers, &c. in each whereof die between 100 and 150 per annum, then an hundred pariſhes would be a fit and equal diviſion of this great charge, and all the miniſters (ſome whereof have now ſcarce forty pounds per annum) might obtain a ſubſiſtence.

6. And

6. And laſtly, the church-wardens and over-ſeers of the poor might find it poſſible to diſcharge their duties; whereas now in the greater out-pariſhes many of the poorer pariſhioners through neglect do periſh, and many vicious perſons get liberty to live as they pleaſe, for want of ſome heedful eye to overlook them.

CHAP. XI.

Of the number of inhabitants.

I HAVE been ſeveral times in company with men of great experience in this city, and have heard them talk ſeldom under millions of people to be in London: all which I was apt enough to believe, until on a certain day, one of eminent reputation was upon occaſion aſſerting, that there was in the year 1661 two millions of people more than anno 1625 before the great plague. I muſt confeſs, that, until this provocation, I had been frighted, with that miſunderſtood example of DAVID, from attempting any computation of the people of this populous place: but hereupon I both examined the lawfulneſs of making ſuch enquiries, and, being ſatisfied thereof, went about the work itſelf in this manner: viz.

2. Firſt, I imagined, that, if the conjecture of the worthy perſon aforementioned had any truth in it, there muſt needs be about ſix or ſeven millions of people in London now: but, repairing to my bills, I found, that not above 15000 per annum were buried; and conſequently, that not above one in four hundred muſt die per annum, if the total were but ſix millions.

3. Next conſidering, that it is eſteemed an even lay, whether any man lives ten years longer, I ſuppoſed it was the ſame, that one of any ten might die within one year. But when I conſidered, that of the 15000 aforementioned about 5000 were abortive and ſtillborn, or died of teeth, convulſion, rickets, or as infants and chriſoms, and aged; I concluded, that of men and women, between ten and ſixty, there ſcarce died 10000 per annum in London, which number being multiplied by 10, there muſt be but 100000 in all, that is not the $\frac{1}{60}$ part of what the Alderman imagined. Theſe were but ſudden thoughts on both ſides, and both far from truth: I thereupon endeavoured to get a little nearer, thus: viz.

4. I conſidered, that the number of child-bearing women might be about double to the births: foraſmuch as ſuch women, one with another, have ſcarce more than one child in two years. The number of births I found, by thoſe years wherein the regiſtries were well kept, to have been ſomewhat leſs than the burials. The burials in theſe late years at a medium are about 13000, and conſequently the chriſtnings not above 12000. I therefore eſteemed the number of teeming-women to be 24000: then I imagined, that there might be twice as many families, as of ſuch women; for that there might be twice as many women aged between 16 and 76, as between 16 and 40, or between 20 and 44; and that there were about eight perſons in a family, one with another, viz. the man and his wife, three children and three ſervants or lodgers: now 8 times 48000 makes 384000.

5. Secondly, I find by telling the number of families in ſome pariſhes within the walls, that 3 out of 11 families per annum have died: wherefore, 13000 having died died in the whole, it ſhould follow, there were 48000 families according to the laſt-mentioned account.

6. Thirdly, the account, which I made of the trained-bands and auxiliary-ſoldiers, doth enough juſtify this account.

7. And laſtly, I took the map of London ſet out in the year 1658 by RICHARD NEWCOURT, drawn by a ſcale of yards. Now I gueſſed, that in 100 yards ſquare there might be about 54 families, ſuppoſing every houſe to be 20 foot in the front: for on two ſides of the ſaid ſquare there will be 100 yards of houſing in each, and in the two other ſides 80 each; in all 360 yards: that is, 54 families in each ſquare, of which there are 220 within the walls, making in all 11880 families within the walls. But foraſmuch as there die within the walls about 3200 per annum, and in the whole 13000; it follows, that the houſing within the walls is $\frac{4}{11}$ part of the whole, and conſequently, that here are 47520 families in and about London, which agrees well enough with all my former computations: the worſt whereof doth ſufficiently demonſtrate, that there are two millions of people in London, which nevertheleſs moſt men do believe, as they do, that there be three women for one man; whereas there are fourteen men for thirteen women, as elſewhere hath been ſaid.

8. We have (though perhaps too much at random) determined the number of the inhabitants of London to be about 384000: the which being granted, we aſſert, that 199112 are males, and 184886 females.

9. Whereas we have found, that of 100 quick conceptions about 36 of them die before they be ſix years old, and that perhaps but one ſurviveth 76; we having ſeven decads between 6 and 76, we ſought ſix mean proportional numbers between 64, the remainder, living at ſix years, and the one, which ſurvives 76, and find, that the numbers following are practically near enough to the truth; for men do not die in exact proportions, nor in fractions, from whence ariſes this table following.

Viz. Of an hundred there die within the firſt ſix years	36	The fourth	6
		The next	4
The next ten years, or decad	24	The next	3
The ſecond decad	15	The next	2
The third decad	9	The next	1

10. From whence it follows, that of the ſaid 100 conceived, there remain alive at ſix years end 64.

At ſixteen years end	40	At fifty ſix	6
At twenty ſix	25	At ſixty	3
At thirty ſix	16	At ſeventy ſix	1
At forty ſix	10	At eighty ſix	0

11. It follows alſo, that of all, which have been conceived, there are now alive 40 per cent. above ſixteen years old, 25 above twenty ſix years old, & ſic deinceps, as in the above table. There are therefore of aged between 16 and 56 the number of 40 leſs by ſix, viz. 34; of between 26 and 66 the number of 25 leſs by three, viz. 22: & ſic deinceps.

Wherefore, ſuppoſing there be 199112 males, and the number between 16 and 56 being 34; it follows, there are 34 per cent. of all thoſe males fighting men in London,

London, that is, 67694, viz. near 70000; the truth whereof I leave to examination, only the $\frac{1}{5}$ of 67694, viz. 13559, is to be added for Weſtminſter, Stepney, Lambeth, and the other diſtant pariſhes; making in all 81233 fighting men.

12. The next enquiry will be, in how long time the city of London ſhall, by the ordinary proportion of breeding and dying, double its breeding people? I anſwer, in about ſeven years, and (plagues conſidered) eight. Wherefore, ſince there be 24000 pair of breeders, that is $\frac{1}{5}$ of the whole, it follows, that in eight times eight years the whole people of the city ſhall double, without the acceſs of foreigners: the which contradicts not our account of its growing from two to five in 56 years with ſuch acceſſes.

13. According to this proportion, one couple, viz. ADAM and EVE, doubling themſelves every 64 years of the 5610 years, which is the age of the world according to the ſcriptures, ſhall produce far more people than are now in it. Wherefore the world is not above 100 thouſand years old, as ſome vainly imagine, nor above what the ſcripture makes it.

CHAP. XII.

Of the country bills.

WE have, for the preſent, done with our obſervations upon the accounts of burials and chriſtnings in and about London. We ſhall next preſent the accounts of both burials, chriſtnings, and alſo of weddings in the country, having to that purpoſe inſerted tables of 90 years for a certain pariſh in Hantſhire, being a place neither famous for longevity and healthfulneſs, nor for the contrary. Upon which tables we obſerve,

1. That every wedding, one with another, produces four children; and conſequently, that that is the proportion of children, which any marriageable man or woman may be preſumed ſhall have. For, though a man may be married more than once, yet, being once married, he may die without any iſſue at all.

2. That in this pariſh there were born 15 females for 16 males, whereas in London there were 13 for 14; which ſhews, that London is ſomewhat more apt to produce males than the country. And it is poſſible, that in ſome other places there are more females born than males: which, upon this variation of proportion, I again recommend to the examination of the curious.

3. That in the ſaid whole 90 years the burials of the males and females were exactly equal, and that in ſeveral decads they differed not $\frac{1}{100}$ part; that in one of the two decads, wherein the difference was very notorious, there were buried of males 337, and of females but 284, viz. 53 difference; and in the other there died contrariwiſe 338 males, and 386 females, differing 46.

4. There are alſo decads, where the birth of males and females differ very much, viz. about 60.

5. That in the ſaid 90 years there have been born more than buried in the ſaid pariſh (the which, both 90 years ago, and alſo now, conſiſted of about 2700 ſouls) but 1059, viz. not 12 per annum, one year with another.

6. That these 1059 have in all probability contributed to the increase of London; since, as was said even now, it neither appears by the burials, christnings, or by the built of new housing, that the said parish is more populous now, than 90 years ago, by above 2 or 300 souls. Now, if all other places send about $\frac{1}{30}$ of their increase, viz. about one out of 900 of their inhabitants annually to London, and that there be 14 times as many people in England as there be in London (for which we have given some reasons) then London increases by such advenæ every year above 6000: the which will make the account of burials to swell about 270 per annum, and will answer the increases we observe. It is clear, that the said parish is increased about 300, and it is probable, that three or four hundred more went to London; and it is known, that about 400 went to New-England, the Caribbee-Islands, and Newfound-Land, within these last forty years.

7. According to the medium of the said whole 90 years, there have been five christnings for four burials; although in some single years and decads there have been three to two; although sometimes (though more rarely) the burials have exceeded the births, as in the case of epidemical diseases.

8, Our former observation, that healthful years are also the most fruitful, is much confirmed by our country accounts; for, 70 being our standard for births, and 58 for burials, you shall find, that where fewer than 58 died, more than 70 were born. Having given you a few instances thereof, I shall remit you to the tables for the general proof of this assertion: viz. anno 1633, when 103 were born, there died but 29. Now, in none of the whole 90 years, more were born than 103, and but in one fewer than 29 died, viz. 28 anno 1658. Again anno 1568, when 93 were born, but 42 died. Anno 1584, when 90 were born, but 41 died. Anno 1650, when 86 were born, but 52 died. So that by how much more are born, by so much (as it were) the fewer die. For when 103 were born, but 29 died: but when but 86 were born, then 52 died.

On the other side, anno 1638, when 156 died per annum, which was the greatest year of mortality, then less than the meer standard 70, viz. but 66, were born. Again anno 1644, when 137 died, but 59 were born. Anno 1597, when 117 died, but 48 were born. And anno 1583, when 87 died, but 59 were born.

A little irregularity may be found herein, as, that anno 1612, when 116 died (viz. a number double to our standard 58, yet) 87 (viz. 17 above the standard 79) were born; and that when 89 died, 75 were born: but these differences are not so great, nor so often, as to evert our rule, which, besides the authority of these accounts, is probable in itself.

9. Of all the said 90 years the year 1638 was the most mortal. I therefore enquired, whether the plague was then in that parish, and having good satisfaction, that it was not, (which I the rather believe, because that the plague was not then considerable at London) but that it was a malignant fever, raging so fiercely about harvest, that there appeared scarce hands enough to take in the corn: which argues, considering there were 2700 parishioners, that seven might be sick for one, that died: whereas of the plague more die than recover: lastly, these people lay longer sick than is usual in the plague, nor was there any mention of sores, swellings, blew-tokens, &c. among them: it follows, that the proportions between the greatest and the least mortalities in the country are far greater than at London: foraſmuch as the greateſt 156 is above quintuple unto 28 the leaſt; whereas in London (the plague excepted, as here it hath been) the number of burials upon other accounts within no decad of years hath been double; whereas in the country it hath been quintuple not only within the whole ninety years, but alſo within the ſame decad: for anno 1633 there died but 29, and anno 1638 the abovementioned number of 156. Moreover, as in London, in no decad, the burials of one year are double to thoſe of another; ſo in the country they are ſeldom not more than ſo; as by this table appears.

Decad	greateſt number of burials	leaſt burials	Decad	greateſt number of burials	leaſt burials
1	66	34	6	89	50
2	87	39	7	156	35
3	117	38	8	137	46
4	53	30	9	80	28
5	116	51

Which ſhews, that the opener and freer airs are moſt ſubject both to the good and bad impreſſions; and that the fumes, ſteams and ſtenches of London do ſo medicate and impregnate the air about it, that it becomes capable of little more, as if the ſaid fumes riſing out of London met with, oppoſed and juſtled backwards the influences falling from above, or reſiſted the incurſion of the country-airs.

10. In the laſt paragraph we ſaid, that the burials in the country were ſometime quintuple to one another; but of the chriſtnings we affirm, that within the ſame decad they are ſeldom double, as appears by this table, viz.

Decad	greateſt number of births	leaſt births	Decad	greateſt number of births	leaſt births
1	70	50	6	85	63
2	90	45	7	103	66
3	71	52	8	87	62
4	93	60	9	86	52
5	87	61

Now, although the diſproportions of births be not ſo great as that of burials, yet theſe diſproportions are far greater than at London: for let it be ſhewn in any of the London bills, that within two years the chriſtnings have decreaſed $\frac{1}{2}$, or increaſed double, as they did anno 1584, when 90 were born, and anno 1586, wherein were but 45: or to riſe from 52, as anno 1593, to 71, as in the next year 1594. Now theſe diſproportions both in births and burials confirm what hath been afore aſſerted, that healthfulneſs and fruitfulneſs go together, as they would not, were there not diſproportions in both, although proportional.

11. By the ſtandard of burials in this pariſh I thought to have computed the number of inhabitants in it, viz. by multiplying 58 by 4, which made the product

232, the number of families. Hereupon I wondered, that a parish containing a large market-town, and 12 miles compass, should have but 232 houses. I then multiplied 232 by 8, the product whereof was 1856, thereby hoping to have had the number of the inhabitants, as I had for London. But when upon enquiry, I found there had been 2100 communicants in that parish, in the time of a minister, who forced too many into that ordinance, and that 1500 was the ordinary number of communicants in all times; I found also, that forasmuch as there were near as many under 16 years old, as there are above, viz. Communicants, I concluded, that there must be about 2700 or 2800 souls in that parish: from whence it follows, that little more than one of 50 dies in the country, whereas in London it seems manifest, that about one in 32 dies, over and above what die of the plague.

12. It follows therefore from hence, what I more faintly asserted in the former chapter, that the country is more healthful than the city; that is to say, although men die more regularly, and less per saltum in London, than in the country, yet, upon the whole matter, there die fewer per rata; so as the fumes, steams, and stenches abovementioned, although they make the air of London more equal, yet not more healthful.

13. When I consider, that in the country seventy are born for fifty eight buried, and that before the year 1600 the like happened in London, I considered, whether a city, as it becomes more populous, doth not, for that very cause, become more unhealthful: and inclined to believe, that London now is more unhealthful than heretofore; partly for that it is more populous, but chiefly because I have heard, that sixty years ago few sea-coals were burnt in London, which are now universally used. For I have heard, that Newcastle is more unhealthful than other places, and that many people cannot at all endure the smoak of London, not only for its unpleasantness, but for the suffocations which it causes.

14. Suppose, that anno 1569 there were 2400 souls in that parish, and that they increased by the births 70, exceeding the burials 58, it will follow, that the said 2400 cannot double under 200. Now, if London be less healthful than the country, as certainly it is, the plague being reckoned in, it follows, that London must be doubling itself by generation in much above 200: but if it hath increased from 2 to 5 in 54, as aforesaid, the same must be by reason of transplantation out of the country.

The Conclusion.

IT may be now asked, to what purpose tends all this laborious bustling and groping to know,

1. The number of the people?
2. How many males and females?
3. How many married and single?
4. How many teeming-women?
5. How many of every septenary, or decad of years in age?
6. How many fighting men?
7. How much London is, and by what steps it hath, increased?

8. In what time the houſing is repleniſhed after a plague?

9. What proportion die of each general and particular caſualties?

10. What years are fruitful and mortal, and in what ſpaces and intervals they follow each other?

11. In what proportion men neglect the orders of the church, and ſects have increaſed?

12. The diſproportion of pariſhes?

13. Why the burials in London exceed the chriſtnings, when the contrary is viſible in the country?

To this I might anſwer in general, by ſaying, that thoſe, who cannot apprehend the reaſon of theſe enquiries, are unfit to trouble themſelves to aſk them.

2. I might anſwer by aſking, why ſo many have ſpent their times and eſtates about the art of making gold? which, if it were much known, would only exalt ſilver into the place, which gold now poſſeſſeth; and if it were known but to ſome one perſon, the ſame ſingle adeptus could not, nay, durſt not enjoy it, but muſt be either a priſoner to ſome Prince, and ſlave to ſome voluptuary, or elſe ſkulk obſcurely up and down for his privacy and concealment.

3. I might anſwer, that there is much pleaſure in deducing ſo many abſtruſe and unexpected inferences out of theſe poor deſpiſed bills of mortality; and in building upon that ground, which hath lain waſte theſe eighty years. And there is pleaſure in doing ſomething new, though never ſo little, without peſtering the world with voluminous tranſcriptions.

4. But I anſwer more ſeriouſly, by complaining, that whereas the art of governing, and the true politics, is how to preſerve the ſubject in peace and plenty; that men ſtudy only that part of it, which teacheth how to ſupplant and over-reach one another, and how, not by fair out-running, but by tripping up each other's heels, to win the prize.

Now, the foundation or elements of this honeſt harmleſs policy is to underſtand the land, and the hands of the territory, to be governed according to all their intrinſic and accidental differences: as for example; it were good to know the geometrical content, figure, and ſituation of all the lands of a kingdom, eſpecially according to its moſt natural, permanent, and conſpicuous bounds. It were good to know how much hay an acre of every ſort of meadow will bear; how many cattle the ſame weight of each ſort of hay will feed and fatten; what quantity of grain and other commodities the ſame acre will bear in one, three, or ſeven years, communibus annis; unto what uſe each ſoil is moſt proper. All which particulars I call the intrinſic value: for there is alſo another value meerly accidental, or extrinſic, conſiſting of the cauſes, why a parcel of land, lying near a good market, may be worth double to another parcel, though but of the ſame intrinſic goodneſs; which anſwers the queries, why lands in the North of England are worth but ſixteen years purchaſe, and thoſe of the Weſt above eight and twenty. It is no leſs neceſſary to know, how many people there be of each ſex, ſtate, age, religion, trade, rank, or degree, &c. by the knowledge whereof, trade and government may be made more certain and regular; for, if men knew the people, as aforeſaid, they might know the conſumption they would make, ſo as trade might not be hoped for where it is impoſſible. As for inſtance, I have heard much complaint, that trade is not ſet in ſome of the South-weſtern or North-weſtern parts of Ireland, there being ſo many excellent harbours for that purpoſe; whereas in ſeveral of thoſe places I have alſo heard, that there are few other inhabitants, but ſuch as live ex ſponte creatis, and are unfit ſubjects of trade, as neither employing others, nor working themſelves.

Moreover, if all theſe things were clearly and truly known (which I have but gueſſed at) it would appear, how ſmall a part of the people work upon neceſſary labours and callings, viz. how many women and children do juſt nothing, only learning to ſpend what others get; how many are meer voluptuaries, and as it were meer gameſters by trade; how many live by puzzling poor people with unintelligible notions in divinity and philoſophy; how many by perſuading credulous, delicate, and litigious perſons, that their bodies or eſtates are out of tune, and in danger; how many by fighting as ſoldiers; how many by miniſtries of vice and ſin; how many by trades of meer pleaſure, or ornaments; and how many in a way of lazy attendance, &c. upon others: and on the other ſide, how few are employed in raiſing and working neceſſary food and covering; and of the ſpeculative men, how few do ſtudy nature and things! the more ingenious not advancing much further than to write and ſpeak wittily about theſe matters.

I conclude, that a clear knowledge of all theſe particulars, and many more, whereat I have ſhot but at rovers, is neceſſary, in order to good, certain, and eaſy government, and even to balance parties and factions both in church and ſtate. But whether the knowledge thereof be neceſſary to many, or fit for others than the ſovereign and his chief miniſters, I leave to conſideration.

AN

APPENDIX.

FORASMUCH as a long and ſerious peruſal of all the bills of mortality, which this great city hath afforded for almoſt fourſcore years, hath advanced but the few obſervations compriſed in the foregoing treatiſe; I hope very little will be expected from the few ſcattered papers, that have come to my hands ſince the publiſhing thereof, eſpecially from one, that hath learned from the Royal Society, how many obſervations go to the making up of one theorem, which (like oaks and other trees fit for durable building) muſt be of many years growth.

The accounts, which follow, I reckon but as timber and ſtones; and the beſt inferences I can make, are but as hewing them to a ſquare. As for compoſing a beautiful and firm ſtructure out of them, I leave it to the architecture of the ſaid Society, under whom I think it honour enough to work as a labourer.

My firſt obſervation ſhall be, that at Dublin the number of weekly burials being about 20, and thoſe of London about 300, as alſo the number of people reckoned to be within the limits of the bills of mortality at London to be 460000; it will follow, that the number of inhabitants of Dublin be about 30000, viz. about one fifteenth part of thoſe in and about London: which agrees with that number, which I have heard the books of poll-money, raiſed but little before the time of this bill, have exhibited as the number of inhabitants of that city: ſo as although I do not think one ſingle weekly bill is ſufficient to ground ſuch a concluſion upon, yet I think, that ſeveral yearly bills are the beſt of the eaſy ways, from which to collect the number of the people.

Secondly, although I take it for granted, that in Dublin there be more born than buried, becauſe the ſame hath appeared to be ſo in London by the bills of mortality before the year 1641, when the civil wars began, and much more eminently in Amſterdam, as ſhall be hereafter ſhewn; yet there are but 14 ſet down as chriſtned; which ſhews, that the defect there is much the ſame as at London. Whether the cauſe thereof be negligence in the regiſter, or non-conformity to public order, or both, I leave to the curious. I believe the cauſe is alſo the ſame, foraſmuch as I heard it to be a maxim at Dublin, to follow, if not forerun, all that is, or as they underſtand will be, practiſed in London; and that in all particulars incident to human affairs.

I have here inſerted two other country bills, the one of Cranbrook in Kent, the other of Tiverton in Devonſhire, which with that of Hantſhire, lying about the midway between them, give us a view of the moſt eaſterly, ſoutherly, and weſterly parts of England. I have endeavoured to procure the like account from Northumberland, Cheſhire, Norfolk and Nottinghamſhire; thereby to have a view of ſeven counties moſt differently ſituated, from whence I am ſorry to obſerve, that my Southern friends have been hitherto more curious and diligent than thoſe of the North. The full obſervation from theſe bills is, that all theſe three country bills agree, that each wedding produces four children, which is likewiſe confirmed from the bills of Amſterdam. Secondly, they all agree, that there be more males born than females, but in different proportions, for at Cranbrook there be 20 males for 19 females, Hantſhire 16 for 15, in London 14 for 13, and at Tiverton 12 for 11. Thirdly, I have inſerted the bills themſelves, to the end, that whoever pleaſes may examine, by all three together, the obſervations I raiſed from the Hantſhire bill alone; conceiving it will be more pleaſure and ſatisfaction to do it themſelves, than to receive it from another hand. Only I ſhall add, as a new obſervation from them all, that in the years 1648 and 1649, being the time when the people of England did moſt reſent the horrid parricide of his late ſacred Majeſty, that there were but nine weddings in that year in the ſame places, when there were ordinarily between 30 and 40 per annum; and but 16, when there were ordinarily at other times between 50 and 60. And it may be alſo obſerved, that ſomething of this black murder appeared in the years 1643 and 1644, when the civil war was at the higheſt, but the contrary in the years 1654, 1655, &c. to prevent the new way of marriage then impoſed upon the people.

I have alſo ſupplied the tables from the three general bills for the years 1662, 1663, and 1664, which you will find to juſtify the former obſervations. But moſt eminently that, which I take to be of moſt concernment, namely, of the difference between the numbers of males and females.

In the former obſervations I did endeavour to deduce the number of the inhabitants about the city of London, from the bills of mortality, concluding them to be about 460000, and did likewiſe ſet forth by what ſteps the people of the ſaid city have increaſed from two to five ſince the year 1600. And particularly in what proportions the city increaſed in its ſeveral parts from time to time. I have now procured an account of the men, women, and children, which were anno 1631 found within the liberties of London, which are circumſcribed by Temple-Bar, Holborn-Bars, Smithfield-Bars, Shoreditch-Bars, Whitechapel-Bars, and to the Tower liberties, and meal-market in Southwark; by which account I hope it will appear, that I computed too many rather than too few, although the moſt part of men have thought otherwiſe. Nor do I wonder at it, ſince I never obſerved more enormous miſtakes in any matter than concerning the number of people, ale-houſes, coaches, ſhips, ſea-men, water-men, and ſeveral other tradeſmen, &c. The proportions of all which I have always thought is neceſſary to be known, in order to an exact ſymmetry of the ſeveral members of a common-wealth. I ſay, that the whole number of inhabintants exceeds not 460000.

1. The number of men, women, and children, found in the city and liberties 1631 was 130178.

2. The liberties of the city of London conſiſt of the 97 pariſhes within the walls, and of $\frac{2}{3}$ of the 16 pariſhes next without them: which eſtimate of mine, nevertheleſs, I leave to examination.

The liberties of London from the year 1631 to the year 1661 increaſed from 8 to 11, as may appear by the tables; and conſequently the ſaid 130000 found in the year 1631, were increaſed to 179000, in anno 1661. Laſtly, Laſtly, the liberties of London in the year 1661 were in proportion to the whole, as 4 to 9; and conſequently if there were 179000 ſouls, in the ſaid liberties, there was not above 403000 in the whole number of pariſhes then comprehended in the bills of mortality.

The ſubſtance of the Amſterdam bills of mortality is, viz.

1. That there died in the ſeveral years of the plague, as followeth:

Anno 1622	4141	Anno 1628	4497
1623	5929	1636	17193
1624	11795	1655	16727
1625	6781	1663	9752
1626	4425	1664	24148
1627	3976

2. That there are eleven burying-places, beſides the Hoſpital and Peſt-houſe, 257 ſtreets and lanes, with 43 burgwalls and grachts in that city.

3. That in ſeven years, beginning from the 15th of Auguſt 1617 to the ſame day 1624, there were chriſtned in the reformed churches of Amſterdam 52537, and that there died in the ſame time 32532. So as there were 20005 more born than buried, beſides thoſe, that were chriſtned in other congregations. And in the ſame time were 16430 publiſhed marriages.

4. That in the firſt week of September 1664 there died 1041, and in eighteen weeks before the burials increaſed from 331 up to the ſaid number of 1041, and in twelve weeks after decreaſed back to the like number of 330.

5. In February following there died but 118 a week, and the ordinary number of weekly burials is about 100, ſo as London ſeems to be three times as big as Amſterdam.

6. I have likewiſe happened on ſome other accounts, relating to mortalities of ſome great cities of the world; of what authority I know not, but as printed at Amſterdam 1664, viz. anno 1619 there died in Grand Cairo in ten weeks 73500, without any viſible diminution of the people.

7. Anno 1625 there died in Leyden 9597. Anno 1635 there died in the ſame city of Leyden from the 14th of July, to the 29th of December 14381: the greateſt week of mortality being the latter end of October was 1452. This plague in 15 weeks increaſed from 96 to the ſaid number of 1452, and in ten weeks after decreaſed to 107. Anſwerable to the time of increaſe and decreaſe aforementioned in Amſterdam, anno 1655, there died in 21 weeks from July to November 13287, the greateſt week being September 25, when died 896.

8. At Harlem there died in the ſame year, in the months of Auguſt, September, October and November 5723.

9. Anno 1637, in Conſtantinople there died 1500 per diem: but how long this plague laſted, appeareth not.

10. The ſame year died in Prague 20000 Chriſtians, and 10000 Jews.

11. Anno 1652 there died in Cracovia 17000 Chriſtians, and 20000 Jews.

12. Anno 1653 there died in Dantzick in the laſt week of September 640, and in Conningſburg 490.

13. 1654 there died in Copenhagen for ſeveral weeks 700 per week.

14. Anno 1655 there died at Amſterdam and Leyden, as abovementioned; and at Deventer 70, 80, and 90 per diem.

15. At Leeuwardeen 56 per diem.

Anno 1656 there was ſo ſweeping a plague at Naples, that there died of it at the latter end of May 1300, or 1400 per diem. The ſixth of June there were 80000 ſick, that the well were not able to help, or bury the dead; preſently after there died 5000 in three days; in Auguſt it began to ceaſe, after it had deſtroyed 300000 people.

17. The town of Scala in Italy was quite diſpeopled, and at Minory there eſcaped but 22. At Rome there died in the ſame year about 100 per diem for a great while together.

18. 1657 There died at Genoa in Midſummer week 1200, afterwards there died 1600 per diem; inſomuch that in the beginning of Auguſt they burnt the dead corps for want of hands to bury them, which great mortality decreaſed to five or ſix per diem before September was out. The total ſum of all that died was about 70000.

19. At Bergen in Norway, anno 1618 the plague is repreſented to have been very terrible, by ſaying, that there died 50 or 60 per diem, and that the whole city was in tears; that the coffin-makers refuſed to make coffins; that parents carried their children, and children their parents to the grave. But foraſmuch as it was not mentioned how populous this place was, nor for how many days the mortality continued, I can make but little eſtimate of this plague, by what is above related.

20. The general obſervations ariſing from the abovementioned particulars are as followeth:

Firſt, that Northern, as well as Southern countries are infeſted with great plagues; although in the Southern countries they are more vehement, and do both begin and end more ſuddenly.

21. Secondly, from the year 1652 the plague was at Cracow, 1653 at Dantzick and Coningſburg, 1654 at Copenhagen, 1655 at Leyden and Amſterdam, and other towns in the Netherlands, 1656 at Naples and Rome, 1657 at Genoa; ſo as it well deſerves enquiry, whether the plague in all theſe places were a ſickneſs of the ſame kind, and did ſucceſſively perambulate the ſeveral countries abovementioned; or whether it were a ſeveral diſeaſe in each place.

22. Thirdly, that the plague is longer in riſing to its height, than in decreaſing to the ſame pitch; and the proportion thereof, in ſuch caſes where it hath moſt plainly appeared, is about three to two; for at Amſterdam it was eighteen weeks riſing, and twelve decreaſing; and at Leyden fifteen upon the increaſe, and ten decreaſing.

It may be further obſerved, that in the four ſeveral times of great mortality, the height was not always in the ſame month; for anno 1592 it was the ſecond week in Auguſt, when there died 1550 of all diſeaſes; in the year 1603 the height was the ſecond week of September, when there died 3129 of all diſeaſes; in 1625 the extremity was in the third week in Auguſt, when there died 5205. Anno 1636 the like extremity was in the firſt week of October, there then dying 4005 of all diſceaſes. In this place I think fit to intimate, that conſidering the preſent increaſe of the city from anno 1625 to this time, which is from eight to thirteen, that until the burials exceed 8400 per week, the mortality will not exceed that of 1625. Which GOD for ever avert.

It may be further obſerved, that the time of the plague's continuance at the height was of ſeveral durations; for anno 1592 it continued from the firſt week in July to the ſecond of September, without increaſing or decreaſing above 100 in 1600; whereas in 1603 it remained but three weeks at a ſtay, increaſing near $\frac{1}{4}$ the next week after the height; anno 1625 it remained not three weeks at a ſtay, increaſing $\frac{1}{16}$ part the next week before the height, and decreaſing as much the next week after. Anno 1636 it ſtood five weeks without increaſing or decreaſing above $\frac{1}{16}$ part aforementioned.

Concerning the diſeaſe of the plague, anno 1592 it increaſed to $\frac{1}{16}$ of the greateſt number that died in twenty weeks; anno 1603, it did the ſame in eleven; anno 1625, in nine weeks; anno 1636, as it was not ſo fierce as in the other years, ſo it was of longer continuance, as hath been elſe-where noted.

The laſt thing I ſhall obſerve is, that in all the four great years of mortality abovementioned, I do not find, that any week the plague increaſed to the double of the precedent week above five times.

Anno 1631. Ann. 7. Caroli I.

The table following contains the number of burials and chriſtnings in the ſeven pariſhes hereafter mentioned, from the year 1636 unto the year 1659 incluſive; all which time the burials and chriſtnings were jointly mentioned: the five laſt years the chriſtnings were omitted in the yearly bills. This table conſiſts of ſeventeen columns, the total of all the burials being contained in the ſixteenth column: which number being added to the total in the precedent table of burials and chriſtnings, makes the total of every yearly or general bill. Note,

Note, where there follows a second number under any year, it denotes those which died that year of the plague.

The number of the weddings, christnings and burials, that were in the parish of Cranbrooke, from March 26, 1560, to March 24, 1649; (as appeareth by the register) only in the years 1574 and 1575 the christnings are wholly omitted, because the register is very imperfect for the greater part of those years.

Major JOHN GRAUNT.

WHEREAS in the month of December, in the year 1672, there were chriſtned in the ſeveral pariſhes of the city and ſuburbs of Paris 1366, and weddings 68, and buried 1153; yet of the reformed religion, in the ſame ſpace of time and place, there were chriſtned but 27, and buried but 14: at a medium being compared to the groſs ſum, the proteſtants in Paris are but as one to 65.

A further obſervation may be made; that whereas in the whole year of 1672, there were buried 17584, and the chriſtnings then were 18427, which difference between chriſtnings and burials was very agreeable with the difference formerly in the city of London, before phanaticiſm and the anabaptiſts were known in thoſe parts: but in the ſame year of 1672 in the city of London and places adjacent, the burials were 18230, and the chriſtnings but 12563: by which it plainly appears that $\frac{1}{3}$ of the inhabitants of the places aforeſaid are ſuch, as do not conform to the doctrine and diſcipline of the church of England.

As concerning the common queſtion, whether Paris or London hath moſt inhabitants, my anſwer muſt be framed after this manner, upon ſome obſervations made upon the numbers of burials of each city.

I find that in the city and ſuburbs of Paris in the years 1670, 1671, and 1672, the total number of the burials was 56443, and in the years aforeſaid in the city of London, ſuburbs and places adjacent (as appears by the annual bills of mortality) were buried 54157.

But ſince that Hackney, Lambeth, Newington, Iſlington, Rotherhith, Stepney, and Weſtminſter, although put into the bills of mortality, they cannot properly be reckoned as parts of the city of London (Weſtminſter being a diſtinct city of itſelf, and the other above-named country villages) and there having been buried in the places laſt named in the three years aforeſaid (as appears by the ſaid annual bills) 10000, which being deducted out of the number aforeſaid, the remaining number is 44157, upon which I think the compariſon muſt be made.

By which it appears, that Paris hath exceeded the city of London in the number of burials 12286, which number is between a fourth and a fifth of the ſaid number of 56443, which is the proportion of the difference in the number of inhabitants; the city of Paris having more than a fourth, and yet not a fifth more than the city of London.

Ad-

Advertiſements for the better underſtanding of the ſeveral tables: videlicet,

Concerning the table of caſualties conſiſting of thirty columns.

THE firſt column contains all the caſualties happening within the 22 ſingle years mentioned in this bill.

The 14 next columns contain two of the laſt ſeptenaries of years, which being the lateſt are firſt ſet down.

The 8 next columns repreſent the 8 firſt years, wherein the caſualties were taken notice of.

Memorandum, that the ten years between 1636 and 1647 are omitted as containing nothing extraordinary, and as not conſiſtent with the incapacity of a ſheet.

The 5 next columns are the 8 years from 1629 to 1636 brought into 2 quaternions, and the 12 of the 14 laſt years brought into three more; that compariſon might be made between each 4 years taken together, as well as each ſingle year apart.

The next column contains three years together, taken at 10 years diſtance from each other; that the diſtant years, as well as conſequent, might be compared with the whole 20, each of the 5 quaternions, and each of the 22 ſingle years.

The laſt column contains the total of all the 15 quaternions or 25 years.

The number 229250 is the total of all the burials in the ſaid 20 years, as 34190 is of the burials in the ſaid three diſtant years. Where note, that the $\frac{1}{8}$ of the latter total is 11396, and the $\frac{1}{20}$ of the former is 11462; differing but 66 from each other in ſo great a ſum, videlicet, ſcarce $\frac{1}{200}$ part.

The

The table of burials and chriſtnings, conſiſting of ſeven columns.

IT is to be noted, that in all the ſeveral columns of the burials thoſe dying of the plague are left out, being reckoned all together in the ſixth column: whereas in the original bills, the plague, and all other diſeaſes are reckoned together, with mention how many of the reſpective totals are of the plague.

Secondly, From the year 1642 forwards, the account of the chriſtnings is not to be truſted, the neglects of the ſame beginning about that year: for in 1642 there are ſet down 10370, and about the ſame number ſeveral years before, after which time the ſaid chriſtnings decreaſed to between 5000 and 6000, by omiſſion of the greater part.

Thirdly, the ſeveral numbers are caſt up into octonaries, that compariſon may be made of them as well as of ſingle years.

The table of males and females, containing five columns.

Firſt, the numbers are caſt up for 12 years; videlicet, from 1629, when the diſtinction between males and females firſt began, until 1640 incluſive, when the exactneſs in that account ceaſed.

Secondly, from 1640 to 1660 the numbers are caſt up into another total, which ſeems as good for comparing the number of males with females, the neglect being in both ſexes alike and proportionable.

The tables concerning the country pariſh, the former of decads beginning at 1569, and continuing until 1658, and the latter being for ſingle years, being for the ſame time, are ſo plain, that they require no further explanation than the bare reading the chapter relating to them, &c.

POLITICAL ARITHMETIC

Concerning the growth of the

CITY OF LONDON:

WITH THE

MEASURES, PERIODS, CAUSES, and CONSEQUENCES thereof.

By Sir WILLIAM PETTY F.R.S.

Reprinted from the Edition printed at LONDON in 1683.

The Principal Points of this Discourse.

THAT London doubles in forty years, and all England in three hundred and ſixty years.

2. That there be, anno 1682, about ſix hundred and ſeventy thouſand ſouls in London, and about ſeven millions, four hundred thouſand in all England and Wales; and about twenty millions of acres of land.

3. That the periods of doubling the people are found to be in all degrees, from between ten, to twelve hundred years.

4. That the growth of London muſt ſtop of itſelf, before the year 1800.

5. A table helping to underſtand the ſcriptures, concerning the number of people mentioned in them.

6. That the world will be fully peopled within the next two thouſand years.

7. Twelve touch-ſtones, whereby to try any propoſal, pretended for the public good.

8. How the city of London may be made (morally ſpeaking) invincible.

9. An help to uniformity in Religion.

10. That 'tis poſſible to increaſe mankind by generation four times more than at preſent.

11. The plagues of London is the chief impediment and objection againſt the growth of the city.

12. That an exact account of the people is neceſſary in this matter.

Of the growth of the city of LONDON: and of the MEASURES, PERIODS, CAUSES, and CONSEQUENCES thereof.

What is meant by London.

BY the city of London, we mean the houſing within the walls of the old city, with the liberties thereof, Weſtminſter, the Borough of Southwark, and ſo much of the built ground in Middleſex and Surrey, whoſe houſes are contiguous unto, or within call of thoſe aforementioned. Or elſe we mean the houſing, which ſtand upon the ninety ſeven pariſhes within the walls of London; upon the ſixteen pariſhes next, without them; the ten pariſhes of Weſtminſter, and the ſeven pariſhes without them all; all which one hundred and thirty pariſhes are comprehended within the weekly bills of mortality.

What is meant by the growth of London.

The growth of this city is meaſured, 1. By the quantity of ground, or number of acres upon which it ſtands. 2. By the number of houſes, as the ſame appears by the hearth-books and late maps. 3. By the cubical content of the ſaid houſing. 4. By the flooring of the ſame. 5. By the number of days-work, or charge of building the ſaid houſes. 6. By the value of the ſaid houſes, according to their yearly rent, and number of years purchaſe. 7. By the number of inhabitants; according to which latter ſenſe only, we make our computations in this eſſay.

Till a better rule can be obtained, we conceive, that the proportion of the people may be ſufficiently meaſured by the proportion of the burials in ſuch years, as were neither remarkable for extraordinary healthfulneſs or ſicklineſs.

In what meaſures the city hath increaſed.

That the city hath increaſed in this latter ſenſe appears from the bills of mortality, repreſented in the two following tables, viz. one whereof is a continuation for eighteen years, ending 1682, of that, table which was publiſhed in the 117th* page of the book of the obſervations upon the London bills of mortality, printed in the year 1676. The other ſheweth what number of people died at a medium of two years, indifferently taken, at about twenty years diſtance from each other.

According to which latter table there died as followeth.

The latter of the said two tables.

There died in London, at a medium, between the years

1604 and 1605 —— 5135. A.
1621 and 1622 —— 8527. B.
1641 and 1642 —— 11883. C.
1661 and 1662 —— 15148. D.
1681 and 1682 —— 22331. E.

Wherein observe, that the number C is double to A, and 806 over; that D is double to B within 1906; that C and D is double to A B within 293; that E is double to C within 1435; that D and E is double to B and C within 3341; and that C and D and E are double to A and B and C within 1736; and that E is above quadruple to A. All which differences (every way considered) do allow the doubling of the people of London in forty years to be a sufficient estimate thereof in round numbers, and without the trouble of fractions. We also say, that that 669930 is near the number of people now in London, becauſe the burials are 22331, which multiplied by 30, (one dying yearly out of 30, as appears in the 94th * page of the aforementioned obſervations) maketh the ſaid number; and becauſe there are 84 thouſand tenanted houſes (as we are credibly informed) which, at 8 in each, makes 672 thouſand ſouls; the ſaid two accounts differing inconſiderably from each other.

We have thus pretty well found out in what number of years (viz. in about 40,) the city of London hath doubled, and the preſent number of inhabitants to be about 670 thouſand. We muſt now alſo endeavour the ſame for the whole territory of England and Wales. In order whereunto, we firſt ſay,

The people of London are about the eleventh part of all England and Wales. And the people of England about 7 millions and 400 thouſands.

That the aſſeſſment of London is about an eleventh part of the whole territory, and therefore that the people of the whole may well be eleven times that of London, viz. about 7 millions, 369 thouſand ſouls; with which account that of the poll-money, hearth-money, and the Biſhops late numbering of the communicants, do pretty well agree. Wherefore, although the ſaid number of 7 millions, 369 thouſand, be not (as it cannot be) a demonſtrated truth, yet it will ſerve for a good ſuppoſition, which is as much as we want at preſent.

As for the time in, which the people double, it is yet more hard to be found: for we have good experience (in the ſaid 94th † page of the aforementioned obſervations) that in the country, but one of fifty die per annum; and by other late accounts, that there have been ſometimes but 24 births for 23 burials: the which two points, if they were univerſally, and conſtantly true, there would be colour enough to ſay, that the people doubled but in about 1200 years. As for example: ſuppoſe there be 600 people, of which let a fiftieth part die per annum, then there ſhall die 12 per annum; and if the births be as 24 to 23, then the increaſe of the people ſhall be ſomewhat above half a man per annum, and conſequently the ſuppoſed number of 600, cannot be doubled but in 1126, which to reckon in round numbers, and for that the aforementioned fractions were not exact, we had rather call 1200.

There are alſo other good obſervations, that even in the country, one in about 30, or 32 per annum hath died, and that there have been five births for four burials. Now, according to this doctrine, 20 will die per annum out of the above 600, and 25 will be born, ſo as the increaſe will be 5, which is a hundred and twentieth part of the ſaid 600. So as we have two fair computations, differing from each other as one to ten; and there are alſo ſeveral other good obſervations for other meaſures.

I might here inſert, that although the births in this laſt computation be 25 of 600, or a twenty fourth part of the people; yet that in natural poſſibility, they may be near thrice as many, and near 75. For that by ſome late obſervations, the teeming females between 15 and 44, are about 180 of the ſaid 600, and the males of between 18 and 59, are about 180 alſo, and that every teeming woman can bear a child once in two years; from all which it is plain, that the births may be 90 (and abating 15 for ſickneſs, young abortions, and natural barenneſs) there may remain 75 births, which is an eighth of the people; which by ſome obſervations we have found to be but a two and thirtieth part, or but a quarter of what is thus ſhewn to be naturally poſſible. Now, according to this reckoning, if the births may be 75 of 600, and the burials but 15, then the annual increaſe of the people will be 60; and ſo the ſaid 600 people may double in 10 years, which differs yet more from 1200, abovementioned. Now, to get out of this difficulty, and to temper thoſe vaſt diſagreements, I took the medium of 50 and 30 dying per annum, and pitched upon 40; and I alſo took the medium between 24 births and 23 burials, and 5 births for 4 burials, viz. allowing about 10 births for 9 burials; upon which ſuppoſition, there muſt die 15 per annum out of the abovementioned 600, and the births muſt be 16 and two thirds. and the increaſe 1, and two thirds, or five thirds of a man, which number compared with 1800 thirds *, or 600 men, gives 360 years for the time of doubling (including ſome allowance for wars, plagues, and famine, the effects whereof, though they be terrible at the times and places where they happen, yet in a period of 360 years, is no great matter in the whole nation. For the plagues of England in 20 years have carried away ſcarce an eightieth part of the people of the whole nation; and the late 10 years civil wars, (the like whereof hath not been in ſeveral ages before) did not take away above a fortieth part of the whole people.)

According to which account or meaſure of doubling, if there be now in England and Wales, 7 millions 400 thouſand people, there were about 5 millions 526 thouſand in the beginning of Queen ELIZABETH's reign, anno 1560, and about two millions at the Norman conqueſt, of which conſult the Dooms-day book, and my Lord HALE's Origination of mankind.

Three hundred and twenty millions now in the world.

Memorandum, that if the people double in 360 years, that the preſent 320 millions, computed by ſome learned men, (from the meaſures of all the nations of the world, their degrees of being peopled, and good accounts of the people in ſeveral of them) to be now upon the face of the earth, will, within the next 2000 years, ſo increaſe, as to give one head for every two acres of land in the habitable part of the earth. And then, according to the prediction of the Scriptures, there muſt be wars and great ſlaughter, &c.

Wherefore, as an expedient againſt the abovementioned difference between 10 and 1200 years, we do for the preſent, and in this country admit of 360 years to be the time, wherein the people of England do double, according to the preſent laws and practice of marriages.

Now, if the city double its people in 40 years, and the preſent number be 670 thouſand, and if the whole territory be 7 millions 400 thouſand, and double in 360 years, as aforeſaid; then by the underwritten table it appears, that anno 1840, the people of the city will be 10718880, and thoſe of the whole country but 10917389, which is but inconſiderably more. Wherefore it is certain and ne-

* That the time of doubling is here and now 360 years.

ceſſary,

ceſſary, that the growth of the city muſt ſtop before the ſaid year 1840: and will be at its utmuſt height in the next preceding period, anno 1800, when the number of the city will be eight times its preſent number, viz. 5 millions 359 thouſand. And when (beſides the ſaid number) there will be 4 millions 466 thouſand to perform the tillage, paſturage, and other rural works neceſſary to be done without the ſaid city, as by the following table, viz.

	Annis.	Burials.	People in London.	People in England.
	1565	2568	77040	5526929.
As in the former table.	1605	5135
	1642	11883
	1682	22331	669930	7369230.
	1722	44662
	1762	89324
	1802	178648	5359440	9825650.
	1842	357296	10718880	10917389.

That London will be at its higheſt growth, and eight times as great as now, anno 1800.

Now when the people of London ſhall come to be ſo near the people of all England, then it follows, that the growth of London muſt ſtop before the ſaid year 1842, as aforeſaid, and muſt be at its greateſt height anno 1800, when it will be eight times more than now, with above four millions for the ſervice of the country and ports, as aforeſaid.

A digreſſion of the uſe of the vaſt difference between 10 and 1200 years of doubling.

Of the aforementioned vaſt difference between 10 years and 1200 years for doubling the people, we make this uſe, viz. to juſtify the Scriptures and all other good hiſtories concerning the number of the people in antient time. For ſuppoſing the eight perſons, who came out of the ark, increaſed by a progreſſive doubling in every ten years, might grow in the firſt hundred years after the flood from 8 to 8000, and that in 350 years after the flood (when abouts NOAH died) to one million, and by this time 1682, to 320 millions (which by rational conjecture, are thought to be now in the world) it will not be hard to compute, how in the intermediate years, the growth may be made, according to what is ſet down in the following table, wherein making the doubling to be ten years at firſt, and within 1200 years at laſt, we take a diſcretionary liberty, but juſtifiable by obſervations and the Scriptures for the reſt, which table we leave to be corrected by hiſtorians, who know the bigneſs of antient cities, armies, and colonies in the reſpective ages of the world; in the mean time affirming, that without ſuch difference in the meaſures and periods for doubling (the extreams whereof we have demonſtrated to be real and true) it is impoſſible to ſolve what is written in the holy Scriptures and other authentic books. For if we pitch upon any one number throughout for this purpoſe, 150 years is the fitteſt of all round numbers; according to which, there would have been but 512 ſouls in the whole world in MOSES's time (being 800 years after after the flood) when 603 thouſand Iſraelites of above twenty years old (beſides thoſe of other ages, tribes, and nations) were found upon an exact ſurvey appointed by GOD. Whereas our table makes 12 millions. And there would have been but 8000 in DAVID's time, when were found 1100 thouſand of above twenty years old (beſides others, as aforeſaid) in Iſrael, upon the ſurvey inſtigated by ſatan, whereas our table makes 32 millions. And there would have been but a quarter of a million about the birth of CHRIST, or AUGUSTUS's time, when Rome and the Roman empire were ſo great, whereas our table makes 100 millions. Where note, that the Iſraelites in about 500 years, between their coming out of Egypt to DAVID's reign, increaſed from 603 thouſand to 1100 thouſand.

On the other hand, if we pitch upon a leſs number, as 100 years, the world would have been over-peopled 700 years ſince. Wherefore, no one number will ſolve the phænomena, and therefore we have ſuppoſed ſeveral in order to make the following table, which we again deſire hiſtorians to correct, according to what they find in antiquity concerning the number of the people in each age and country of the world.

We did (not long ſince) aſſiſt a worthy divine, writing againſt ſome ſceptics, who would have baffled our belief of the reſurrection, by ſaying, that the whole globe of the earth could not furniſh matter enough for all the bodies that muſt riſe at the laſt day, much leſs would the ſurface of the earth furniſh footing for ſo vaſt a number: whereas we did (by the method aforementioned) aſſert the number of men now living, and alſo of thoſe that had died ſince the beginning of the world, and did withal ſhew, that half the iſland of Ireland would afford them all, not only footing to ſtand upon, but graves to lie down in, for that whole number; and that two mountains in that country were as weighty as all the bodies, that had ever been from the beginning of the world to the year 1680, when this diſpute happened. For which purpoſe, I have digreſſed from my intended purpoſe, to inſert this matter, intending to proſecute this hint further, upon ſome more proper occaſion.

It is here to be noted, that in this table we have aſſigned a different number of years for the time of doubling the people in the ſeveral ages of the world, and might have done the ſame for the ſeveral countries of the world; and therefore the ſaid ſeveral periods aſſigned to the whole world in the lump may well enough conſiſt with the 360 years eſpecially aſſigned to England, between this day, and the Norman conqueſt; and the ſaid 360 years may well enough ſerve for a ſuppoſition between tween this time, and that of the world's being fully peopled; nor do we lay any ſtreſs upon one or the other in this diſquiſition concerning the growth of the city of London.

We have ſpoken of the growth of London, with the meaſures and periods thereof: we come next to the cauſes and conſequences of the ſame.

The cauſes of its growth from 1642 to 1682, may be ſaid to have been as followeth, viz. from 1642 to 1650, that men came out of the country to London, to ſhelter themſelves from the outrages of the civil wars, during that time: from 1650 to 1660, the royal party came to London, for their more private and inexpenſive living: from 1660 to 1670, the King's friends and party came to receive his favours after his happy reſtoration: from 1670 to 1680, the frequency of plots and parliaments might bring extraordinary numbers to the city. But what reaſons to aſſign for the like increaſe from 1604 to 1642, I know not, unleſs I ſhould pick out ſome remarkable accident happening in each part of the ſaid period, and make that to be the cauſe of this increaſe (as vulgar people make the cauſe of every man's ſickneſs, to be what he did laſt eat): wherefore, rather than ſo to ſay quidlibet de quolibet, I had rather quit even what I have above ſaid to be the cauſe of London's increaſe from 1642 to 1682, and put the whole upon ſome natural and ſpontaneous benefits and advantages, that men find by living in great more than in ſmall ſocieties; and ſhall therefore ſeek for the antecedent cauſes of this growth in the conſequences of the like, conſidered in greater characters and proportions.

Now, whereas in arithmetic, out of two falſe poſitions, the truth is extracted, ſo I hope out of two extravagant contrary ſuppoſitions, to draw forth ſome ſolid and conſiſtent concluſion, viz.

The firſt of the ſaid two ſuppoſitions is, that the city of London is ſeven times bigger than now, and that the inhabitants of it are four millions 690 thouſand people, and that in all the other cities, ports, towns, and villages, there are but two millions 710 thouſand more.

The other ſuppoſition is, that the city of London is but a ſeventh part of its preſent bigneſs, and that the inhabitants of it are but 96 thouſand, and that the reſt of the inhabitants (being 7 millions 304 thouſand) do cohabit thus, 104 thouſand of them in ſmall cities and towns, and that the reſt, being ſeven millions 200 thouſand, do inhabit in houſes not contiguous to one another, viz. in 1200 thouſand houſes, having about 24 acres of ground belonging to each of them, accounting about 28 millions of acres to be in the whole territory of England, Wales, and the adjacent iſlands; which any man that pleaſes may examine upon a good map.

Now, the queſtion is, in which of theſe two imaginary ſtates would be the moſt convenient, commodious and comfortable livings?

But this general queſtion divides itſelf into the ſeveral queſtions, relating to the following particulars, viz.

1. For the defence of the kingdom againſt foreign powers.
2. For preventing the inteſtine commotions of parties and factions.
3. For peace and uniformity in religion.
4. For the adminiſtration of juſtice.
5. For the proportionably taxing of the people, and eaſy levying the ſame.

6. For

6. For gain by foreign commerce.
7. For husbandry, manufacture, and for arts of delight and ornament.
8. For lessening the fatigue of carriages and travelling.
9. For preventing beggars and thieves.
10. For the advancement and propagation of useful learning.
11. For increasing the people by generation.
12. For preventing the mischiefs of plagues and contagions. And withal, which of the said two states is most practicable and natural; for in these, and the like particulars, do lie the tests and touch-stones of all proposals, that can be made for the public good.

First, as to practicable, we say, that although our said extravagant proposals are both in nature possible, yet it is not obvious to every man to conceive, how London, now seven times bigger than in the beginning of Queen ELIZABETH's reign, should be seven times bigger than now it is, and 49 times bigger than anno 1560. To which I say, 1. That the present city of London stands upon less than 1500 acres of ground: wherefore a city seven times as large may stand upon 10500 acres, which is about equivalent to a circle of four miles and a half in diameter, and less than 15 miles in circumference. 2. That a circle of ground of 35 miles semidiameter will bear corn, garden-stuff, fruits, hay, and timber for the four millions 690 thousand inhabitants of the said city and circle, so as nothing of that kind need be brought from above 35 miles distance from the said city; for the number of acres within the said circle, reckoning one acre sufficient to furnish bread and drink-corn for every head, and two acres will furnish hay for every necessary horse; and that the trees, which may grow in the hedge-rows of the fields within the said circle, may furnish timber for 600 thousand houses. 3. That all live cattle and great animals can bring themselves to the said city; and that fish can be brought from the Land's-end and Berwick as easily as now. 4. Of coals there is no doubt: and for water, 20 s. per family (or 600 thousand pounds per annum in the whole) will serve this city, especially with the help of the New River. But if by practicable be understood, that the present state may be suddenly changed into either of the two abovementioned proposals, I think it is not practicable. Wherefore the true question is, unto or towards which of the said two extravagant states it is best to bend the present state by degrees, whether it be best to lessen or enlage the present city? in order whereunto, we enquire (as to the first question) which state is most defensible against foreign powers, saying, that if the abovementioned housing, and a border of ground, of three quarters of a mile broad, were encompassed with a wall and ditch of 20 miles about (as strong as any in Europe, which would cost but a million, or about a penny in the shilling of the house-rent for one year) what foreign prince could bring an army from beyond seas, able to beat, 1. our sea-forces, and next with horse harrass'd at sea, to resist all the fresh horse, that England could make, and then conquer above a million of men, well united, disciplined, and guarded within such a wall, distant every where three quarters of a mile from the housing, to elude the granadoes and great shot of the enemy? 2. As to intestine parties and factions, I suppose that 4 millions 690 thousand people united within this great city could easily govern half the said number scattered without it; and that a few men in arms within the said city, and wall, could also easily govern the reſt unarmed, or armed in ſuch manner as the ſovereign ſhall think fit. 3. As to uniformity in religion, I conceive, that if St. Martin's pariſh may (as it doth) conſiſt of about 40 thouſand ſouls, that this great city alſo may as well be made but as one pariſh, with ſeven times 130 chapels, in which might not only be an uniformity of common prayer, but in preaching alſo; for that a thouſand copies of one judiciouſly and authentically compoſed ſermon might be every week read in each of the ſaid chapels without any ſubſequent repetition of the ſame, as in the caſe of homilies. Whereas in England (wherein are near ten thouſand pariſhes, in each of which upon Sundays, holidays, and other extraordinary occaſions, there ſhould be about 100 ſermons per annum, making about a million of ſermons per annum in the whole) it were a miracle, if a million of ſermons compoſed by ſo many men, and of ſo many minds and methods, ſhould produce uniformity upon the diſcompoſed underſtandings of about eight millions of hearers.

4. As to the adminiſtration of juſtice; if in this great city ſhall dwell the owners of all the lands, and other valuable things in England; if within it ſhall be all the traders, and all the courts, offices, records, juries, and witneſſes; then it follows, that juſtice may be made with ſpeed and eaſe.

5. As to the equality and eaſy levying of taxes, it is too certain, that London hath at ſome times paid near half the exciſe of England; and that the people pay thrice as much for the hearths in London as thoſe in the country, in proportion to the people of each; and that the charges of collecting theſe duties have been about a ſixth part of the duty itſelf. Now, in this great city, the exciſe alone, according to the preſent laws, would not only be double to the whole kingdom, but alſo more equal. And the duty of hearths of the ſaid city would exceed the preſent proceed of the whole kingdom. And as for the cuſtoms, we mention them not at preſent.

6. Whether more would be gained by foreign commerce.

The gain, which England makes by lead, coals, thef reight of ſhipping, &c. may be the ſame, for ought I ſee, in both caſes. But the gain, which is made by manufactures, will be greater, as the manufacture itſelf is greater and better. For in ſo vaſt a city manufactures will beget one another, and each manufacture will be divided into as many parts as poſſible, whereby the work of each artiſan will be ſimple and eaſy; as for example. In the making of a watch, if one man ſhall make the wheels, another the ſpring, another ſhall engrave the dial-plate, and another ſhall make the caſes; then the watch will be better and cheaper, than if the whole work be put upon any one man. And we alſo ſee, that in towns, and in the ſtreets of a great town, where all the inhabitants are almoſt of one trade, the commodity peculiar to thoſe places is made better and cheaper than elſewhere. Moreover, when all ſorts of manufactures are made in one place, there every ſhip, that goeth forth, can ſuddenly have its loading of ſo many ſeveral particulars and ſpecies, as the port whereunto ſhe is bound can take off. Again, when the ſeveral manufactures are made in one place, and ſhipped off in another, the carriage, poſtage, and travelling charges will inhance the price of ſuch manufactures, and leſſen the gain upon foreign commerce. And laſtly, when the imported goods are ſpent in the port itſelf, where they are landed, the carriage of the ſame into other places will create no ſur-charge upon ſuch commodity; all which particulars tend to the greater gain by foreign commerce.

7. As

7. As for arts of delight and ornament,

They are beſt promoted by the greateſt number of emulators. And it is more likely, that one ingenious curious man may rather be found out amongſt four millions than 400 perſons. But as for huſbandry, viz. tillage and paſturage, I ſee no reaſon, but the ſecond ſtate (when each family is charged with the culture of about 24 acres) will beſt promote the ſame.

8. As for leſſening the fatigue of carriage and travelling,

The thing ſpeaks itſelf; for if all the men of buſineſs and all artiſans do live within five miles of each other; and if thoſe, who live without the great city, do ſpend only ſuch commodities, as grow where they live, then the charge of carriage and travelling could be little.

9. As to the preventing of beggars and thieves,

I do not find how the differences of the ſaid two ſtates ſhould make much difference in this particular; for impotents (which are but one in about 600) ought to be maintained by the reſt. 2. Thoſe, who are unable to work through the evil education of their parents, ought (for ought I know) to be maintained by their neareſt kindred, as a juſt puniſhment upon them. 3. And thoſe, who cannot find work (though able and willing to perform it) by reaſon of the unequal application of hands to lands, ought to be provided for by the magiſtrate and landlord till that can be done; for there need be no beggars in countries, where there are many acres of unimproved improvable land to every head, as there are in England. As for thieves, they are, for the moſt part, begotten from the ſame cauſe; for it is againſt nature, that any man ſhould venture his life, limb, or liberty, for a wretched livelihood, whereas moderate labour will produce a better. But of this ſee Sir THOMAS MORE, in the firſt part of his Utopia.

10. As to the propagation and improvement of uſeful learning,

The ſame may be ſaid concerning it as was above ſaid concerning manufactures, and the arts of delight and ornaments; for in the great vaſt city, there can be no ſo odd a conceit or deſign, whereunto ſome aſſiſtance may not be found, which in the thin, ſcattered way of habitation may not be.

11. As for the increaſe of people by generation,

I ſee no great difference from either of the two ſtates, for the ſame may be hindered or promoted in either, from the ſame cauſes.

12. As to the plague,

It is to be remembered, that one time with another, a plague happeneth in London once in 20 years, or thereabouts; for in the laſt hundred years, between the years 1582 and 1682, there have been five great plagues, viz. anno 1592, 1603, 1625, 1636, and 1665. And it is alſo to be remembered, that the plagues of London do commonly kill one fifth part of the inhabitants. Now, if the whole people of England do double but in 360 years, then the annual increaſe of the ſame is but 20000, and in 20 years 400000. But if in the city of London there ſhould be two millions of people, (as there will be about 60 years hence) then the plague (killing one fifth of them, namely, 4000000, once in 20 years) will deſtroy as many in one year, as the whole nation can re-furniſh in 20: and conſequently the people of the nation ſhall never increaſe. But if the people of London ſhall be above four millions (as in the firſt of our two extravagant ſuppoſitions is premiſed) then the people of the whole nation ſhall leſſen above 20000 per annum. So as if people be worth 70 l. per head (as hath elſewhere been ſhewn) then the ſaid greatneſs of the city will be a damage to itſelf and the whole nation of 14 hundred thouſand pounds per annum, and ſo pro rata, for a greater or a leſſer number. Wherefore to determine, which of the two ſtates is beſt, that is to ſay, towards which of the ſaid two ſtates authority ſhould bend the preſent ſtate; a juſt balance ought to be made between the diſadvantages from the plague with the advantages accruing from the other particulars abovementioned; unto which balance a more exact account of the people and a better rule for the meaſure of its growth is neceſſary, than what we have here given, or are yet able to lay down.

POSTSCRIPT.

IT was not very pertinent to a diſcourſe concerning the growth of the city of London, to thruſt in conſiderations of the time, when the whole world will be fully peopled; and how to juſtify the Scriptures concerning the number of people mentioned in them; and concerning the number of the quick and the dead, that may riſe at the laſt day, &c. Nevertheleſs, ſince ſome friends liking the ſaid digreſſions and impertinencies (perhaps as ſauce to a dry diſcourſe) have deſired, that the ſame might be explained and made out, I therefore ſay as followeth:

1. If the number of acres in the habitable part of the earth be under 50 thouſand millions; if twenty thouſand millions of people are more than the ſaid number of acres will feed; (few or no countries being ſo fully peopled;) and for that in ſix doublings (which will be in 2000 years) the preſent 320 millions will exceed the ſaid 20 thouſand millions.

2. That the number of all thoſe, who have died ſince the flood, is the ſum of all the products made by multiplying the number of the doubling periods mentioned in the firſt column of the laſt table, by the number of people reſpectively affixed to them, in the third column of the ſame table; the ſaid ſum being divided by 40 (one dying out of 40 per annum, out of the whole maſs of mankind) which quotient is 12570 millions; whereunto may be added, for thoſe that died before the flood, enough to make the laſt mentioned number 20 thouſand millions, as the full number of all that died, from the beginning of the world, to the year 1682; unto which, if 320 millions, the number of thoſe who are now alive, be added, the total of the quick and the dead will amount but unto one fifth part of the graves, which the ſurface of Ireland will afford, without ever putting two bodies into any one grave; for there be in Ireland 28 thouſand ſquare Engliſh miles, each whereof will afford about 4 millions of graves, and conſequently above 114 thouſand millions of graves, viz. about 5 times the number of the quick and the dead, which ſhould ariſe at the laſt day, in caſe the ſame had been in the year 1682.

3. Now, if there may be place for five times as many graves in Ireland, as are ſufficient for all that ever died; and if the earth of one grave weigh five times as much as the body interred therein, then a turf, leſs than a foot thick, pared off from a fifth part of the ſurface of Ireland, will be equivalent in bulk and weight to all the bodies that ever were buried; and may ſerve as well for that purpoſe, as the two mountains aforementioned in the body of this diſcourſe. From all which it is plain, how madly they were miſtaken, who did ſo petulantly vilify what the holy Scriptures have delivered.

OBSERVATIONS

ON THE

PAST GROWTH and PRESENT STATE

OF THE

CITY of LONDON.

To which are annexed,

A complete table of the chriſtnings and burials within this city from 1601 to 1750, both years incluſive; together with a table of the numbers, which have annually died of each diſeaſe from 1675 to the preſent time; and alſo a further table repreſenting the reſpective numbers, which have annually died of each age from 1728 to this year; from which is particularly attempted to be ſhewn the increaſing deſtruction of infants and adults in this city; and conſequent thereto, the exceſſive drain, which it continually makes upon all the provinces of this kingdom for recruits. To which are added ſome propoſals for a better regulation of the police of this metropolis

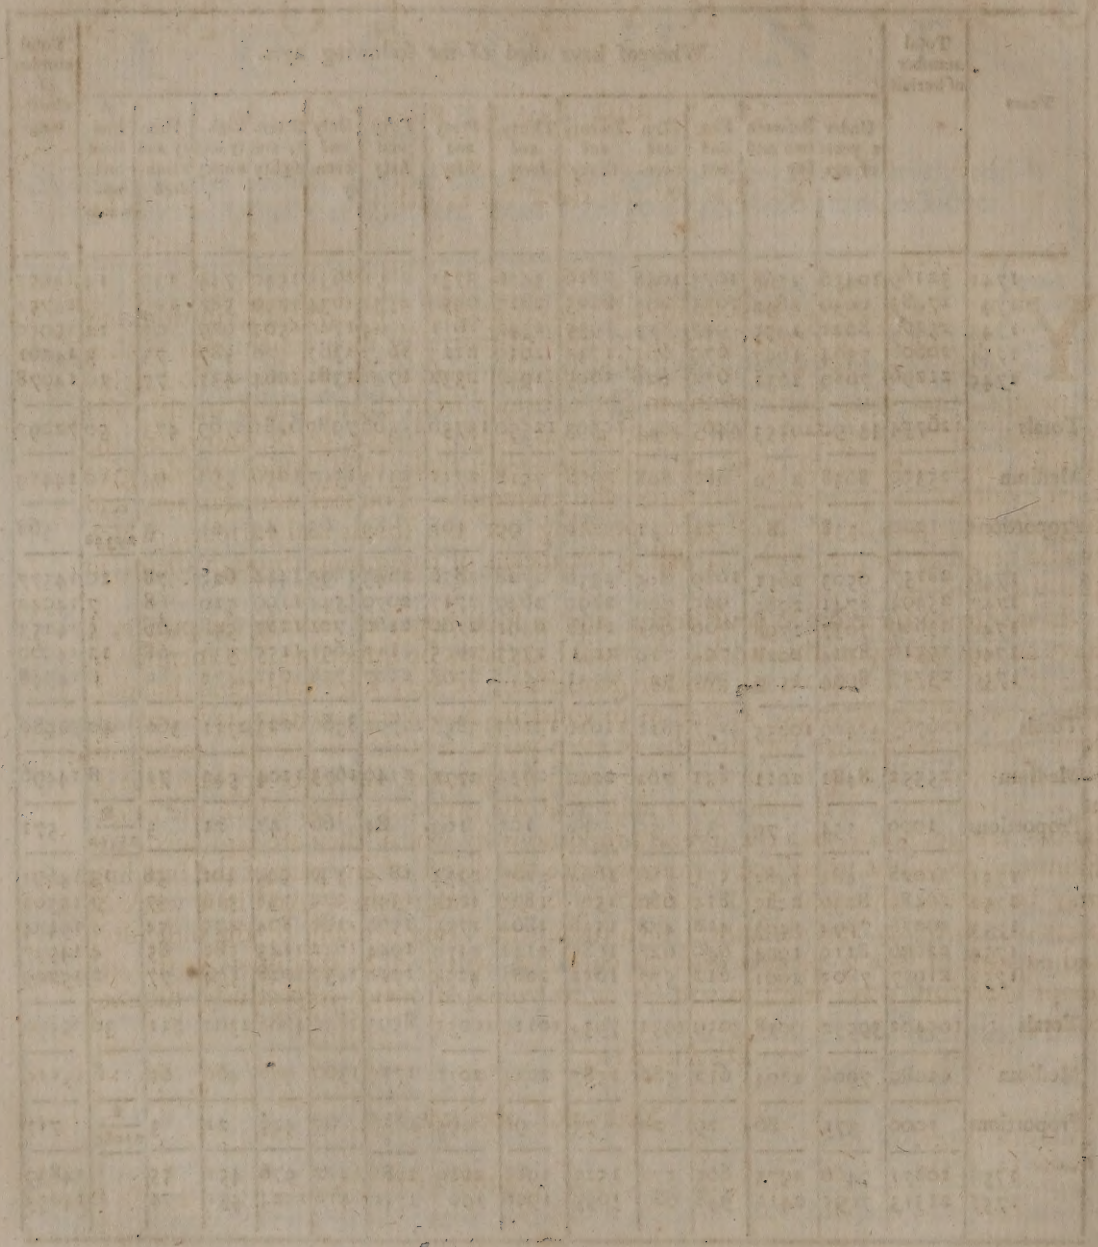
OBSERVA-



OBSERVATIONS

POLITICAL and NATURAL, &c.

To THOMAS POTTER, Esq;

DEAR SIR,

YOU did me great honour in our conversation a few days past, in thinking me capable of drawing from the bills of mortality such conclusions as they truly afford, and are worthy of being submitted to the public.—You rightly judged, that many observations might be drawn from them, which would yield valuable information.—At least, that it was highly proper to be known by the public, what conclusions could be discovered from these bills, which would give their evidence independent of all party, and prejudice.—You still went farther, and suggested the course to be steered, pointing out the shoals and currents, which would certainly be met with, as well as the means of navigating through them, in this undertaking.

In deference therefore to your desire, and in fond hopes of serving the public, I have adventured upon this work. It would perhaps be impertinent to mention in this place, what is known to another gentleman, of very high rank and honour, who approved the attempt, as well as to yourself, how very few days have been allotted to it; fewer than the months or even years, requisite to the full treating of such a subject. But as no further time could be granted, the piece appears as it is, at all adventures.—It is sufficient to add, that the grounds, upon which the calculations are founded, and the several proportions by which they are regulated, are submitted to public inspection; from whence the defect of any part of the building may be clearly discerned, and rectified by better judgments.—And in a work of particular curiosity and difficulty, such judgments being sensible of the difficulty, and capable of being pleased with the curiosity, will ever be candid.—As this attempt therefore owes itself to you, it is to your patronage respectfully submitted by,

DEAR SIR,

Your most obedient,

humble servant,

CORBYN MORRIS.

Holles-Street,
Cavendish-Square,
March 12, 1751.

OBSER-

OBSERVATION I.

Of the causes whence the burials in London exceed the christnings.—And, on the contrary, whence the christnings in the country exceed the burials.

CAUSE the first.

MULTITUDES of adult persons are continually called to London from various parts, by occasional business. To instance particulars,—Many by the courts of justice; as country attorneys, and persons concerned in law-suits.—Others by commercial affairs; as foreign and provincial merchants, tradesmen, captains of ships, graziers, and all sorts of apprentices.—Great numbers by attendance upon the court and parliament; as persons from different counties, interested in public acts, officers civil and military, and others soliciting preferment.

Many of these persons are not married, and few of those who are, bring their wives with them to London upon these occasions.—All these persons are therefore liable to die, and do considerably increase the amount of the burials; but can add nothing to the amount of the christnings, except by promiscuous venery with other mens wives, or with common women; which practices are found rather to prevent than promote the procreation of children.

CAUSE the second. Another source of the excess of the burials beyond the christnings, is the large number of servants, of both sexes, retained by the great families continually resident in London, or who retire to it from the country in winter; these servants being generally unmarried, stand in the condition of the persons in the former article. In that, they all contribute to the amount of the burials, and very little, or not at all, to the christnings.

CAUSE the third. The unhealthiness of the air of London to children is the occasion that a much greater portion of the infants, which are born there, die under five years old, than of those born in the country. Add to which, many adult persons, of weak constitutions, who would enjoy competent health in the country, find the air of London extremely noxious, and yet continue to linger in it to death, compelled by the necessity of their affairs. The lives also of many other adults in London are shortened, or cut off by venereal diseases, beyond what suffer from the same evil in the country.—This mixture of causes therefore, under this head, must likewise contribute to raise the proportion of the burials in London, beyond that for the same number of people resident in the provinces.

CAUSE the fourth. The discouragement to matrimony in London is a grand operating cause of the diminution of the christnings, and consequently of the excess of the burials. The unmarried ladies and gentlemen in this city, of moderate fortunes, which are the great bulk, are unable to support the expence of a family with any magnificence; and therefore cannot intermarry together, without retiring from high life, and submitting to relinquish those pleasures of the town, to which which their appetites have long been raiſed; they therefore acquieſce in celibacy; each ſex compenſating itſelf, as it can, by other diverſions.—Perſons alſo of inferior ſituation in London, have their taſte for pleaſures inflamed; and avoid, with caution, the marriage ſtate with their equals.—And as to the vaſt body of common manufacturers, labourers, and porters, the expences in London of houſe-rent, including taxes, together with the high rate of milk, roots, and other proviſions proper for children, are ſuch, that, undoubtedly ſuch perſons enter at the ſame time into matrimony, and poverty and diſtreſs.—Hence therefore a great checque to the births in London, and a vaſt body of people furniſhing to the amount of the burials, and not at all to the chriſtnings.

Whereas the chriſtnings in the country exceed the burials; for the chief part of the adult inhabitants there are little ſhopkeepers, farmers, and labourers; the two firſt are generally married for the convenience of their buſineſs; to which they are alſo encouraged, by the cheapneſs of houſe-rent and proviſions; and even the labourers there alſo, finding the rent of a cottage, together with milk, roots, and other food proper for children, cheap, and within their income, uſually marry, eſpecially if they bend their minds to reſide in the country.—All theſe, which are the general body of the provincial houſekeepers, having little luxury, and who live temperately, in a pure air, with few anxieties, are liable to rear great numbers of healthy children;—and (having no conflux of ſtrangers to them) to raiſe the amount of the births above the burials;—many of which children, when they afterwards become adult, flock to the metropolis, and other towns. Whence it is, that the numbers deſtroyed by war, peſtilence, and the luxury of great cities, are continually recruited by theſe ſupplies from the country.

CAUSE the fifth. But above all, the preſent increaſing diminution of the chriſtnings in London beneath the burials, with many other evils, is particularly to be attributed to the enormous uſe of ſpirituous liquors. For it is beyond all diſpute, that ſuch liquors are become the common drink, and even the food too, if it may be ſo termed, of theſe people. The effects of which therefore muſt neceſſarily appear.—And the certain notorious ones are, that it debilitates and enervates the drinkers, drying up and burning their radical ſtrength and moiſture, ſo as to render them leſs capable of labour, or the procreation of children.—With adult perſons, theſe fatal draughts operate in enfeebling them, and carrying many to their graves.—But they trebly operate in reſpect to infants; 1ſt, In preventing many from being begotten, by the debility of the males. 2dly, Where the weakneſs is not on the male ſide, by preventing many conceptions, by the ſterility of the females; which ſterility is known to be a certain conſequence of the drinking of theſe potions. And, laſtly, by rendering ſuch as are born meagre and ſickly, and unable to paſs through the firſt ſtages of life.—This laſt effect therefore contributes to increaſe the burials, and the two former to diminiſh the chriſtnings.—No wonder then, under the ſhocking influence of this ſingle cauſe, that the chriſtnings in London ſhould be inferior to the burials. And that they are not only ſo, but that the chriſtnings have proceeded, of late years, ſince the uſe of theſe liquors, in a continually decreaſing proportion, in reſpect to the burials, is a ſerious truth, evident beyond all contradiction, by the annexed annual amounts of both, extracted from the bills of mortality.—But for exciting the juſt attention of the public to the ſhocking conſumption of theſe liquors by the common people, and for pointing out their fatal effects upon the morals and health of the preſent, and the growth of the future race, the whole nation is greatly obliged to the worthy and pathetic repreſentations of the Biſhop of Worceſter.

Observation II.

Whatever deſtruction ſhall be made of the people of London, by ſickneſs, or other evil, will be quickly replaced by freſh ſupplies of people from the country; ſo as that early in the firſt year after, this city will ſet out again with the ſame ſtock as before, of even married adults; and will raiſe the ſame annual produce of new-born infants, as before, within the ſecond year after ſuch evil.

The high notion which country traders hold of the wealth of London, carries them with wings thither, upon the firſt news of the ceaſing of the plague, and of vacancies wanting to be filled in this metropolis.—At the ſame time, the new demand for common manufacturers and labourers, to replace thoſe who have been deſtroyed, brings a vaſt conflux of theſe people to London.—Of all which, ſome few, eſpecially of the traders, being married, are followed by their wives and children. And others of all ſorts ſeeing opportunities of ſettling themſelves in conſtant livelihoods here, immediately marry, and take poſſeſſion of the deſerted ſhops and ſtalls of their predeceſſors;—every one, in ſuch caſes, ſtriving to be foremoſt, and the ſtruggle commencing within few months after the ceaſing of the ſickneſs.—So that, conſidering alſo the number of infirm, unhealthy people of London ſwept away at ſuch times, who could add little to the amount of the chriſtnings, and are yet replaced by vigorous, active perſons from the country, it appears probable, from theſe principles, that the procreative power of London is rather increaſed, and the actual number, even of married adults therein, is compleatly repaired, within very few months, after ſuch evil.

The truth of this theory is clearly confirmed, in fact, beyond all diſpute, by the bills of mortality.—For, during the years 1603, 1625, 1636, and 1665, the plague was in London. Now, the level of the chriſtnings in the years next antecedent to 1603, according to Graunt, who had poſſeſſion of the bills, amounted to about 6000 annually; which ſunk in that plague year 1603 to 4789; but roſe again in the next year 1604 to 5458; and in 1605, the ſecond year after the plague, the chriſtnings amounted to 6504, which was above the level before the plague, and ſtill proceeded gradually increaſing.

It is evident therefore, that the old annual amount of new-born infants in London appeared again in the ſecond year after this plague; and as to the amount of married adults there, and the time when this was reſtored alſo, they may both be readily collected from the ſame principle.—For it is certain, that all the children, who were born there the ſecond year after the plague, muſt have been begotten within the following ſpace; that is, within nine months before the beginning of this ſecond year, and nine months before the end of it; wherefore the earlieſt part of of theſe children was begotten about three months after the plague year, and the lateſt part about fifteen months after it. Whence the number of married adults in London muſt have been as great during that ſpace; that is, from three months after the plague year, to fifteen months after it, as in any one of the years preceding the plague.—Therefore it appears, in this inſtance, that after the plague in London in 1603, the old amount of married adults was compleatly replaced there, long before the end of the firſt year after; and the annual produce of children as great in the ſecond year after, as in any year antecedent.

To give further inſtances.—In 1624, the year next preceding a plague year, the chriſtnings amounted to 8299.—In 1625, the plague year itſelf, the chriſtnings ſunk to 6983.—In 1626, the next year after this plague, the chriſtnings ſtill ſunk to 6701; occaſioned, perhaps, by the ſudden approach of this plague, and its violent ravages during its ſhort continuance; the terror of which might probably drive more people than uſual out of London, in the very plague year, and conſequently diminiſh the chriſtnings in the firſt year after.—But in 1627, the ſecond year after the plague, the chriſtnings amounted again to 8408, which exceeded the old level before it, and went on rapidly increaſing.

Thirdly,—In 1635, the year antecedent to the plague year, the chriſtnings amounted to 10,034.—In 1636, the plague year itſelf, the chriſtnings ſunk to 9522.—In 1637, (the plague not being yet entirely ceaſed, 3082 having died of it that year) the chriſtnings ſtill ſunk to 9160.—But in 1638, the ſecond year after the height of the plague, the chriſtnings aroſe to 10,311, which exceeded the old level before it, and went on increaſing till the year 1642.—In which, and ſeveral ſucceeding years of civil war, the large proportion of the married men carried out of London, ſeem to have diminiſhed the amount of the chriſtnings; or rather the diſſenſions in religion then prevalent, probably ſuppreſſed the true amount of the chriſtnings from that time to the reſtoration.

Laſtly, in 1664, the year antecedent to the plague year, the chriſtnings amounted to 11,722.—In 1665, the plague year itſelf, the chriſtnings ſunk to 9967.—In 1666, the next year after the plague, and the year of the great fire alſo in London, it is to be expected that the chriſtnings ſhould ſtill ſink, as they accordingly did; but yet even under this new evil, no lower than to 8997.—But in 1667, the ſecond year after the plague, and the very firſt after the fire, they aroſe to 10,938.—And in 1668, the ſecond year after the fire, which was before the houſes could be all rebuilt, the chriſtnings amounted to 11,623; which was nearly the level before the plague, and went on to the year 1724, when ſpirituous liquors began to make havock, in a conſtant ſtate of increaſe.

It appears therefore, by all theſe repeated inſtances, that within the ſecond year after a plague, or fire, in London, or even both jointly, the annual produce of new-born infants there, will be as great as it was in the year before ſuch evil; and conſequently, that even the married adults there, as well as of all other adults, will have been fully reſtored to their former level, early in the firſt year after ſuch evil.

This immediate renewal of the adults and new-born infants in London, after any plague, or violent deſtruction there, will take place, in all caſes, whilſt this city continues to be the ſeat of the court and parliament.—Whatſoever ſhall have been the tendency before, whether the total number of people therein ſhall have been in a ſtate of growth, or declenſion, or nearly at a ſtand, it will be reſtored immediately after ſuch evil to the ſame ſtate again, and flow onwards, in reſpect to the number of adults and new-born infants, in the manner it would have done, had there been no ſuch interruption.

But as to the children or non-adults deſtroyed by the plague, as there is little demand for ſuch in London, it is probable that their number would not be renewed immediately; but that a leſs portion of theſe than formerly would be found in London, and continue to be ſo till the year of adultage again, reckoning from one year after the plague; by which time, their whole race, by the ſucceſſive new births, would be renewed.

Observation III.

Of the preſent bill of mortality, and of a general bill propoſed to be kept, under new regulations, through the whole kingdom.

The preſent annual bills of mortality for London, though kept in a better method than formerly, are yet defective in many particulars of the moſt important concern.

1ſt. The extent of time at the beginning of life, is not ſufficiently divided, although the degrees of ſtrength at this time are continually varying from each other, and with ſwift ſteps.—Inſomuch, that one month in the earlieſt infancy produces greater alterations, than ſeveral years in manhood—Theſe ſucceſſive and violent ravages in infancy ought therefore to be minutely deſcribed, in order to furniſh cautions for the better ſecurity of life in its tender years; upon which the very preſervation, and much more the increaſe, of our ſpecies principally depends.

2dly. The diſeaſes are not connected with the ſeveral ages: thus, for inſtance, although it appears by the bill for the laſt year 1750, that 4543 died of conſumptions, 5837 of convulſions, 4294 of fevers, and 1229 of the ſmall-pox; yet of what ages theſe ſeveral perſons were, is uncertain.—Whereas, by annexing to every diſeaſe the number of perſons of each age dying thereof, it would appear, from remarks upon a competent ſeries of years, to what diſeaſes perſons of every age were particularly ſubject. From whence, if theſe bills were extended throughout the kingdom, the growth or declenſion of every particular diſeaſe would be clearly diſcovered.—This would furniſh a conſtant fund of inſtruction to the intelligent phyſician;—and at particular critical junctures might ſuggeſt cautions, not unworthy the attention of the legiſlative body of the kingdom;—at leaſt, would make a faithful report to it of the ſtate of the national health, and of the annual increaſe or diminution of the people.

It will alſo be requiſite, that the amount of the weddings ſhould be inſerted in this bill; and alſo the reſpective amounts of thoſe accidentally ſickning of the ſmall-pox, and dying thereof; and of thoſe receiving it from inoculation, and dying under this proceſs.—For which purpoſe, an account ſhould be given to the officers of each pariſh of every perſon receiving this diſtemper, as ſoon as it is clearly diſcerned, under a penalty upon the maſter of the houſe, where the patient firſt ſickned, for neglect.—This, in a proper ſeries of time, would furniſh ample conviction, viction, and remove female prejudices upon this ſubject; whereby the lives of ſome thouſands throughout this kingdom might probably be annually ſaved.

Diſſenters alſo ſhould be required to keep their bills in the ſame manner; and to deliver a monthly account to the church-wardens of each pariſh, of all the particulars preſcribed, which have happened to perſons, within their congregations, belonging to ſuch pariſh.

But no difference of ſects to be inſerted in the bill of mortality, for two reaſons; —1ſt, Becauſe it would annually bear a public teſtimony of our ſeveral religious diviſions, and tend to foment thoſe anew, which ſeem to be in a ſwift courſe of declining. And 2dly, becauſe it may oftentimes be very difficult to aſſign the religion of the perſon deceaſed.

If a bill of mortality had been regularly kept through the whole kingdom, for a ſeries of time backwards equal to the extent of life, in which the annual burials, and not only the ages, but likewiſe the years of the birth of the ſeveral perſons dying, and alſo the diſeaſes of which they died, were reſpectively inſerted, it would furniſh an admirable and various fund, for the moſt uſeful and curious inſtruction to the public.

It would repreſent, in one view, the total number of burials branched out into three heads, viz. the numbers of theſe, dying of each age, of each diſeaſe, and of each birth; which three particulars ought to be inſerted in the certificate for every perſon, deceaſed: as might very eaſily be done; and would be found to give little additional trouble, after the form was once introduced, and become cuſtomary.

Whereas in the preſent method of inſerting the age only of the dead perſon in the bill of mortality, great uncertainty ariſes in regard to the year to which his birth is to be referred, although that is the year to which he belongs; and from the births of which his death is a deduction. Thus, ſuppoſe it appeared that in the year ended at Chriſtmas 1750, one thouſand children died under one year old, it is very uncertain what part of theſe were born in that year, and what part in the year antecedent. And although mortality may generally be ſuppoſed to flow at an equal rate, through two adjacent ſhort ſpaces, and the number dying in one may be nearly equal to that dying in the other, ſo that theſe numbers frequently may be ſubſtituted for each other, and muſt be ſo, when no greater exactneſs can be attained, yet they have not the perfection of the real truth, nor yield that ſatisfaction. Eſpecially, as it is probable, that in the courſe of a conſiderable number of years it may happen, though not often, that great variations may ariſe in the mortality of the perſons born in two adjacent years; whereby, for inſtance, the numbers paſſing from one year to another, as from nineteen to twenty, in two ſucceſſive years of the ſame apparent ſimilar mortality, may be very different.—But the new method propoſed, of keeping the bill of mortality, avoids all theſe inaccuracies, and uncertainties. A ſpecimen of ſuch a bill, which hath coſt ſome trouble to adjuſt, is hereto annexed.

At the ſame time, it is ſurprizing, that neither GRAUNT, nor Sir WILLIAM PETTY, who both for a long ſeries of years ſtudied the bills of mortality, nor other gentlemen, who have written upon this ſubject, have ever propoſed any new regulation of the form of the defective bills, which might render them duly capable of affording public inſtruction, and be adapted to calculations.

Under

Under the bill of mortality propoſed, one noble inſtance of information, which might clearly be drawn from it at any period, readily ſuggeſts itſelf.—This is, that the total number of perſons living of all ages, and alſo the reſpective numbers living of each age, might from hence accurately be aſcertained;—ſuppoſing this bill to have been kept for a time paſt, equal to the utmoſt extent of life, and alſo the acceſſion of foreigners, during that time, to have been nearly equal to the egreſſion of natives.

Thus, imagine ſuch a bill of mortality to have been regularly kept in any place, for any number of years, as for inſtance ten backwards from Chriſtmas laſt, and that the following problem was given.

Problem I.

To find the number of perſons in ſuch place above nine, and not exceeding ten years old;—ſuppoſing the acceſſion of foreign children of every age to this place, for ten years backwards, to have been equal to the egreſſion of natives of the ſame ages.

Solution.

The number of perſons ſurviving at Chriſtmas laſt above nine, and yet not exceeding ten years old, is the total number of births in the tenth year backwards, reduced by the ſeveral following deductions;—that is, by the part of this total number of births, which died in that tenth year; by the part of the ſame total, which died within the next, or ninth year backwards; by the part of the ſame total, which died within the eighth year backwards; and ſo on, by the ſeveral parts, which died in the ſeventh, ſixth, fifth, fourth, third, ſecond, and firſt, or laſt year backwards.—The amount of all which parts being ſubſtracted from the total number of births in the tenth year, will leave the true number of perſons ſurviving at Chriſtmas laſt, who have paſſed nine, and not exceeded ten years of age, demanded by the problem.

N. B. It is imagined, that this ſingle ſolution will ſufficiently ſhew the uſe of the new bill of mortality propoſed.

Problem II.

To find the total amount of all the non-adults living in the ſame place at Chriſtmas laſt, not exceeding ten years old; the ſame things being ſuppoſed as in the laſt problem.

Solution.

This is eaſy to be attained, by the method uſed in the former ſolution, whereby the number of perſons ſurviving at Chriſtmas laſt, who had paſſed nine, and not exceeded ten years of age, was diſcovered.—And by the ſame method, referring to the the ſeveral ſucceſſive births ſince the tenth year, the numbers ſurviving at Chriſtmas laſt from eight to nine, ſeven to eight, ſix to ſeven, five to ſix, four to five, three to four, two to three, one to two, o to one, years old compleat, may all be obtained reſpectively. The laſt of which is the part ſurviving of thoſe who were born in the laſt year;—and the aggregate ſum of all theſe numbers is the total of the non-adults, not exceeding ten years old, required by the problem.

And if ſuch an annual bill of mortality had been kept through the whole kingdom, for a number of years paſt, equal to the utmoſt extent of life, the total amount of perſons of all ages, and the reſpective numbers of each age, now living in the kingdom, might accurately be determined by the ſame method;—ſuppoſing the annual egreſſion of natives during that time to have been compenſated by the acceſſion of foreigners.

OBSERVATION IV.

Of the annual births to which the numbers annually dying in the ſeveral diviſions of life, inſerted in the preſent bills of mortality, are to be referred.

SOLUTION.

If London received no continual acceſſion of ſtrangers, beyond what is ſent forth of its own growth to other places, the ſeveral proportions of perſons dying within the various diviſions of life, would be very different from thoſe which are now to be derived from the preſent bills of mortality; they would gradually decreaſe from the beginning to the end of life: and ſuch proportions would nearly repreſent the true numbers dying within theſe diviſions, out of every hundred of the burials, whatever ſhould be the progreſs of the people of this city, whether upon an increaſe, level, or declenſion,—as they would repreſent the reſpective proportions annually dying out of what had been born in this city.—But the vaſt acceſſion of ſtrangers to London, above what it ſends forth of its own growth, renders it impracticable to determine the rate of mortality from thoſe numbers, unleſs the annual amount of ſuch acceſſion of ſtrangers, and of their ſeveral ages alſo, be firſt obtained.

However, ſome concluſions may be attempted to be drawn, from laying down the following poſtulatum; which is, that the egreſſion of native non-adults from London, under twenty years old, is nearly equal to the acceſſion of non-adults thither of the ſame ages;—many of ſuch going out from thence to ſchools in the country, and great numbers alſo continually arriving under this age, to become apprentices and ſervants in London.—If this poſtulatum be allowed, then the number of non-adults continually reſident in London, of the ſeveral ages under twenty, is nearly equal to what it raiſes of its own growth under theſe ages.

Hence a very conſiderable circumſtance is obtained; which is, that whereas the reſpective numbers of perſons annually dying within the ſeveral diviſions of life, under twenty years old, before appeared to be portions of the whole number of annual burials, they are now admitted to be the true portions annually dying out of of rhe whole number, annually filling theſe diviſions, of the ſole growth of London.

But it is here to be examined, with due caution, what is to be underſtood by the whole number of perſons annually filling theſe diviſions, out of which the ſeveral annual burials, or waſtes, repreſented in the preſent bill of mortality, have happened.—To determine this, take the aggregate ſum, upon a medium, of the perſons ſurviving together, of all ages under twenty, at the very commencement of the year paſt; and ſuppoſe ſuch aggregate ſum to have flowed uniformly at an equal rate, without diminution or increaſe, for the ſpace of one year, continually waſting in every part, and continually recruited alſo in every part, during its progreſs;—then is the total amount of ſuch waſte equal to the whole number of perſons dying within twenty; which number for the laſt year ended at Chriſtmas 1750, appears to have been 10,012.

Thus it is not to be imagined, that the perſons dying under two years old, during the courſe of the laſt year, were ſolely what died out of the births of this laſt, or firſt year backwards, together with what died out of the births of the antecedent, or ſecond year backwards.—There are ſtill more included;—that is, all who, during the laſt year, died under two years old, out of the births of the third year backwards.—For during the courſe of the laſt year, what died during the firſt month of it might have been of the births of any of the junior eleven months of the third year.—Again, what died within the ſecond month of the laſt year, might have been of the births of any of the ten junior months of the third year.—And in the ſame manner, all who died within the eleventh month of the laſt year, might have been of the births of the laſt month of the third year.

Therefore if the aggregate ſum of the perſons ſurviving of all ages under twenty be taken at the end of the year 1749, and the waſte of this unrecruited ſum, during its flow through the laſt year, be aſſumed, ſuch waſte will be leſs than the foregoing number aſſigned of perſons dying under twenty.—But by what ſum?—By the amount of the perſons, which would ſucceſſively have died, during that year, out of its continual recruit.

The true idea, therefore, of the ſeveral numbers, which are repreſented in the preſent bills of mortality, to have died within the various diviſions of life therein marked, is now obtained;—which is, that each of theſe numbers repreſents not the waſte made, during the firſt week of this year, out of the original amount of people then filling each diviſion, added to the waſte out of the remainder during the ſecond week; and, in the ſame manner, added to all the waſtes made upon the ſucceſſive remainders through the whole year.—But they repreſent the ſeveral waſtes which have been made out of the reſpective original amounts in each diviſion, during the paſt year, ſuppoſing ſuch original amounts to have been continually recruited in every part, during that year.

Thus, in common fact, the waſte in the bill of mortality, during every month in the year, of the perſons within each diviſion, is ſuppoſed to be equal;—at leaſt no diminution of the burials is ſuppoſed liable to happen in the laſt months of the years, rather than in the earlier; which would not be the caſe, unleſs the burials in theſe laſt months, and in every month, happened out of the ſame conſtant recruited amount of people.

If this idea of the ſeveral annual waſtes of people, in the ſeveral diviſions of life, ſhall appear to be at all abſtract, and difficult to be retained, it is not owing to its appearing ſo in this place, but to the preſent method of keeping the bill of mortality, which furniſhes ſuch complicated data.

PROBLEM.

To diſcover the rates of Mortality in the ſeveral diviſions of life, or at leaſt a quantity to which theſe rates are proportional.

SOLUTION.

The annual waſte made in each diviſion of life is, as the whole number of perſons, who have been therein during any part of that year, and as the rate of mortality, jointly.

But the whole number of perſons, which have been in any diviſion during every moment of a year paſt, being only a continued repetition of the medium number in ſuch diviſion, at the commencement, or end of this year, is therefore ſimilar alſo to either of theſe laſt numbers.

Wherefore, the annual waſte in one diviſion, compared with that in any other diviſion, is as the reſpective number of perſons in each, at the commencement, or end of the year, and as the rate of mortality in each, jointly.

Therefore the reſpective rates of mortality, in any two diviſions of life, during any two years given, will be to each other, as their reſpective waſtes in the years given, divided by the total amounts of the perſons ſtanding in each diviſion, at the commencement of each year given, reſpectively,—Suppoſing ſuch amounts to be nearly the medium.

Which proportion let be kept in reſerve for future occaſion.

REMARK.

The total extent of life, from earlieſt infancy to its extinction, is cut by the preſent bills of mortality into the following intervals, or diviſions, viz.

1. Under two years old,	2. Between two and five,	3. Five and ten,	4. Ten and twenty,	5. Twenty, and thirty,	6. Thirty and forty,	7. Forty and fifty,
8481	2011	851	762	2202	2632	2771

8. Fifty and ſixty,	9. Sixty and ſeventy,	10. Seventy and eighty,	11. Eighty and ninety,	12. Ninety and hundred,	13. A hundred and upwards.
2140	1673	1204	542	72	8

The number of which diviſions is thirteen; and the reſpective annual waſtes upon a medium for the laſt five years ended at Chriſtmas 1750, in the city of London, are repreſented by the numbers ſeverally written under each diviſion.

This, at firſt view, ſufficiently points out the vaſt quantity of adults in London, beyond thoſe of its own growth; for if the waſte in the fifth diviſion had been only of perſons of its own growth, it would have been leſs than the waſte in the foregoing diviſion; as the total number, out of which ſuch fifth waſte would have ariſen, muſt have been leſs than the total number in the former diviſion; being, upon a medium, only their ſurvivors. This vaſt number of adults ſubſiſting in London, beyond thoſe of its own produce, coincides with what has been already delivered, upon this head, under the firſt obſervation.

But yet the ſeveral amounts of perſons continually ſubſiſting in London, upon a medium for five years paſt, within the ſeveral diviſions of life, are not raſhly to be eſtimated, according to the foregoing numbers; becauſe the rate of mortality in different diviſions, is extremely different.

It may therefore be proper to be premiſed, that the rate, or force of mortality, during any ſhort ſpace, at the commencement of life, is greater than this force, for the ſame ſpace, at any other interval; but this greater rate, or force of mortality at the commencement, if then eſcaped, proceeds decreaſing, with a very ſwift pace, in the ſecond year, and alſo in the third; after which it advances, ſtill decreaſing more ſlowly and gradually to the end of the fifth year; and from hence likewiſe it flows onwards decreaſing, but by yet ſlower ſteps, to the end of the tenth year; from which time to the end of the thirtieth, it proceeds nearly at an equal pace; however, the point of leaſt rate of mortality, may perhaps be truly fixed in the middle between both, which is at the end of the twentieth year.—After the thirtieth year, the tide is generally upon the return, and the force of mortality begins viſibly to increaſe again, but yet very ſlowly to the fortieth year; from whence in every ſucceeding decad, to the end of life, it continues to gain additional increments: yet theſe additional increments ſteal onwards, with gradual and gentle ſteps, and not with the rapidity of the decrements at the commencement. Otherwiſe life would be ſoon extinguiſhed, and could never approach to that extremity of years, to which it is now extended.

This theory is only premiſed in order to point out the general courſe of the rate of mortality: but the increaſing neglect, or care of infants, and the growing debaucheries, or temperance of adults, together with other cauſes, occaſion great alterations in the amount of this rate, in the ſame diviſions of life, at different periods, even in the ſame places.—And the queſtion here is, to obtain the ſeveral amounts of this rate in London, at ſucceeding periods; which requires a diſcovery to be firſt made of the total amount of the perſons ſubſiſting at ſuch periods, in each diviſion of life, out of which the ſeveral given waſtes have ariſen. But

But firſt, for diſtinction's ſake, let all the perſons under twenty years old in London, which have already been laid down to be of its own growth, or equivalent, be called non-adults; and all of twenty years old and upwards be called adults; and let the following problems be required to be ſolved, from ſuch data as are at preſent furniſhed by the bills of mortality.

PROBLEM I.

To find the proportion which the non-adults of the growth of London, who have paſſed into adultage during any one year given, hath held to the number of ſuch non-adults which paſſed into adultage during any other year given.—Suppoſing the rate of mortality in the ſeveral diviſions of life, for twenty years antecedent to each of the years given, to have been equal.

Thus ſuppoſe, for inſtance, the years 1745 and 1750 were pitched upon, and it was required,

To find the proportion which the number ſupplied by London, of its own growth, towards recruiting its waſte of adults, during one of theſe years, bore to the number it ſupplied towards recruiting its waſte of the ſame ſort, during the other.

PROBLEM II.

To find the proportion which the total amounts of the non-adults of all ages, ſubſiſting in London, at the end of any two given years, have born to each other;—Suppoſing not the ſeveral waſtes, but the rate of mortality in all the non-adult diviſions of life, for twenty years antecedent to each year given, to have been equal.

PROBLEM III.

To find the actual total numbers of non-adults ſubſiſting in London, at the commencement of the years 1750 and 1751, reſpectively.

PROBLEM IV.

To find that part of the whole number of non-adults actually ſubſiſting in London at the end of the laſt year 1750, who were nineteen years old, and under twenty.

This will be the number, which will all paſs into adultage, during this preſent year 1751, excepting what part ſhall die out of them under twenty, during this year; and will be the whole recruit of adults, which London will, this year 1751, obtain from its own produce.

Problem V.

To find the number of adults, which London annually waſtes, beyond the number of ſuch adults, which it annually ſupplies to itſelf, of its own produce.

Problem VI.

To find the number of perſons waſted in London, from the revolution year 1688, to the year 1750, both years incluſive; above what have been raiſed, during the ſame time of the growth of this city;—ſuppoſing it only to contain the ſame number of perſons at the end of this term, as it did at the commencement.

The ſolution of theſe problems, if it can be obtained with tolerable accuracy, would evidently afford very uſeful public information.

To begin therefore with

Problem I.

To find the proportion, which the numbers ſupplied by London, of its own growth, during any two years, towards recruiting its own annual waſte of adults, during theſe years, hold to each other reſpectively; ſuppoſing the rate of mortality, in the ſeveral diviſions of life, for twenty years antecedent to each year given, to have been equal.

Solution.

Imagine the years given to be 1745 and 1751; then the annual number of non-adults ſucceſſively flowing into adultage, during the years 1745 and 1751, will be as the annual births of each of the twenty years antecedent to the two years given; that is, as the births of the years 1724 and 1730, reſpectively: for the ſurviving part of the births of the year 1724, will, after twenty years from its commencement, that is, at the end of the year 1744, all ſtand between nineteen and twenty years old; and that part of theſe births, which ſhall arrive to their twentieth year compleat, will, during the year 1745, all ſucceſſively paſs into adultage, and be the ſole recruit this adultage will obtain during that year 1745, of the growth of London. Therefore univerſally, the rates of mortality being ſuppoſed to flow equally, for each of the twenty years antecedent to the bar of adultage, the numbers paſſing this bar, during any two years given, will be to each other, as the whole births of the years of their nativity reſpectively. Which is the general ſolution of the problem required. Q. E. S.

But the annual births for the years 1724 and 1730, were 19,370 and 17,118, reſpectively, or to each other, as 1000 to 884. Therefore, the annual numbers which London ſupplied towards its own recruit of adults, during theſe laſt years, have been to each other in the ſame proportion, that is, continually decreaſing.

creaſing.—And the annual births from 1729, to the laſt year 1750, having alſo proceeded continually decreaſing, therefore the numbers which London will annually ſupply to its own recruit of adults for twenty years to come, will alſo be continually decreaſing.

PROBLEM II.

To find the proportion, which the total amounts of the non-adults, of all ages, ſubſiſting in London at the end of any two given years, have born to each other reſpectively;—Suppoſing the rates of mortality to have been equal in the ſame diviſions of life, for twenty years antecedent to each of the years given.

SOLUTION.

This proportion will evidently be, as the aggregate ſums of the annual births, for twenty years antecedent to the two years given, are to each other. The non-adults of each age, ſubſiſting at any one inſtant, or for any whole year, being as the reſpective amounts of the annual births of the years of their ſeveral nativities, by the former problem: therefore the aggregate ſums of all the non adults, at any two different periods, are as the aggregate ſums of all their annual births, for the twenty years antecedent to each of the years given; that is, as the aggregate ſums of all the births, in the ſeveral years of their nativity, reſpectively.

PROBLEM III.

To find the actual number of non-adults, from nineteen to twenty years old, ſubſiſting in London, at the commencement of the laſt year 1750, nearly.

SOLUTION.

It appears by the bill of mortality of the year 1749, that 719 died during that year, between ten and twenty years old; therefore the queſtion is, to find the whole number of non-adults, which continually filled this diviſion during that year.—Suppoſe then the rate of mortality, in this diviſion in London, to have been no greater than what flowed through perſons of the ſame ages, in the city of Breſlau. This Suppoſition will be very far from exaggerating the rate of mortality in London, in this diviſion. Now, by Dr. Halley's table of obſervations, eſtimated from the bills of mortality of this city in Sileſia, wherein the egreſſion of natives of all ages was ſuppoſed, as is here done in London, in reſpect to the non-adults only, to have been equal to the acceſſion of ſtrangers, the following proportions are given of the annual waſte of perſons of every age, in that diviſion reſpectively.

Medium proportion of perſons ſubſiſting together at any one time from ten to twenty years old. —— 6282

Therefore it appears, out of 6282 perſons, ſucceſſively paſſing from ten inclusive, to twenty years old, that about 63 died in the courſe of a year; which is nearly one out of every hundred: therefore, ſuppoſing the ſame waſte to have happened to perſons of theſe ages in London, in proportion to their number, during the year 1749, we ſhall have,

As 63 to 6282 ſo is 719 to 71695, which was nearly the whole number of non-adults of ten years old, and under twenty, ſubſiſting in London, at the end of the year 1749, and during every part of that year, upon a medium; according to the amount of the burials in this diviſion, inſerted in the London bills of mortality.

This number can err but very little from the truth, as the rate of mortality here aſſigned coincides with other various experience. For the annual burials of non-adults, from ten years old incluſive, to under twenty, for each of theſe laſt five years ended at Chriſtmas 1750, have been no more than 762 upon a medium: and as there is no reaſon to imagine, that the non-adults within this diviſion in London have been more healthy, than thoſe of Breſlau within the ſame diviſion, the juſt concluſion to be drawn is, that the number of non-adults within this diviſion, ſubſiſting together in London at any one time for five years paſt, hath not exceeded 76200, upon a medium.

It appearing then that 71695 non-adults, ſubſiſted within this diviſion in London at the end of the year 1749, it is required by this problem to find what part of theſe were nineteen years old, and under twenty.—To anſwer this, ſince the number at Breſlau was 601 of this age, out of 6282 from ten to twenty; therefore $\frac{601}{6282} \times 71695$, or 6860, will be the whole number of non-adults from nineteen to twenty, which ſubſiſted in London, at the end of the year 1749; out of which a portion equal to $\frac{598}{601}$ or 6825 all compleatly attained their twentieth year, and during the courſe of the laſt year paſſed into adultage.—And this appears to have have been very nearly the actual number of its own growth according to the foregoing ſuppoſition, which London ſupplied, during the laſt year, towards its own recruit of adults.

That this ſuppoſition hath been carried vaſtly too far in favour of London, is now evident. And it appears plain, that the number of perſons ſubſiſting in London under twenty years old, are much beyond what it raiſes of its own growth; the number 72000 of non-adults from ten to twenty years old conſtantly ſubſiſting in London, which hath here been diſcovered, muſt be near to the truth; but theſe can never be thought to be of the ſole growth of London, by any intelligent obſerver of the bills of mortality, and of the vaſt annual ſhare which the numbers dying under ten years old are of the whole annual births. The number ſurviving of which reſults, upon ſome computations I have made, ſo extremely ſmall, that I cannot venture to deliver it as I intended, without having further proof of its being juſt by the teſt of other trials and computations. But it is certain, upon re-examining the former poſition, that London drains vaſtly more from the country between ten and twenty years old, than it ſends thither conſidering that many of ſuch ages come from the country to ſchools and academies in London; beſides which, a great number are continually ſent hither to be put apprentices: and above all, a very large multitude of young ſervants of both ſexes, who have not yet paſſed their twentieth year, are continually flocking to London. From all which, it muſt be admitted, that this city draws far greater ſupplies, even of non-adults to itſelf, than it ever repays to the country.

Had the method of ſeparating the extent of life into theſe ſeveral diviſions, imperfect as they are, been long eſtabliſhed, it would have now yielded valuable lights to the public, in regard to the variations which may have ſucceſſively happened, in the annual proportions of the perſons dying under each diviſion.—For it is much to be believed, that the preſent portion of poor infants dying under two years of age, is a far greater ſhare, out of all who have been born in this city, than it was formerly before the horrid introduction of ſpirituous liquors. But the misfortune is, that no account of the ages of the perſons dying hath been kept antecedent to the year 1728: and the account of that year too, is imperfect. 'Tis perhaps poſſible, that this might be tolerably approached by a judicious perſon, who could nearly diſtinguiſh the diſeaſes incident to different ages; eſpecially by comparing together the numbers dying in every diviſion, and by the moſt ravaging diſeaſes, during the ſeveral years for which this new account hath been kept; and thence forming the law of gradation backwards. But this requires particular medicinal ſagacity, and good information of the cuſtomary method of ſearchers, in ſettling the diſeaſes of the perſons deceaſed.—To furniſh the means of which, a table is here annexed of the ſeveral diſeaſes inſerted in the bills of mortality, and of the numbers dying of each diſeaſe from the year 1675, the firſt year this account was kept, to 1750, both years incluſive; excepting the years 1698, 1699, and 1700, during which, no account of the numbers dying of the ſeveral diſeaſes is now to be found in the books of the company of pariſh clerks of London, by whom the bill of mortality hath been annually publiſhed.

This table it is hoped, will oblige the curioſity of intelligent medicinal gentlemen: but as to the method of joining the diſeaſes together, which in many inſtances may may be very incongruous, it is chiefly to be imputed to the original mixtures of theſe diſeaſes in the bills of mortality, which it having been impracticable for me to ſeparate, it hath therefore been neceſſary to deliver, as they were publiſhed; beſides which there hath only been added together in parcels ſome diſeaſes of leſſer fatality, which have ſeemed to bear an affinity to each other, for the ſake of avoiding too great prolixity in the tables.

However, for the time, during which the ſeveral ages of the perſons dying have been kept, a diſcovery may now be obtained of the ſeveral proportions, which the rates of mortality in the firſt diviſion of life under two years old, have born to each other, from the year 1731 to the year 1750, both years incluſive. Theſe reſpective rates of mortality, being to each other, as the ſeveral annual waſtes of perſons in each diviſion, divided by the whole medium number of perſons, ſubſiſting together at one time during each year in ſuch diviſion, as hath been before determined: which medium number of perſons is, however, firſt to be obtained. But this, and many other problems of great curioſity, and public information, which ſuggeſt themſelves, in the ſhort time allotted to this work, cannot be duly unravelled.

Problem VI.

To find the number of perſons waſted in London, from the revolutiou year 1688, to the year 1750, both years incluſive, above what have been raiſed during the ſame time, of the growth of this city,—ſuppoſing it only to contain at preſent the ſame number of perſons, which it did at the commencement of this term.

Solution.

Imagine the whole number of perſons ſubſiſting in London, at the commencement of the year 1688, to be denoted by the letter A, or any other character, or ſymbol aſſumed at pleaſure.

Then imagine this body A to have moved forwards for ſixty-three years, that is, to the end of the laſt year 1750; during which time it hath been continually waſted by the ſucceſſive annual burials, and continually filled again by its own ſucceſſive annual births, and alſo by recruits from the country: but the total amount of the burials for theſe ſixty three years, is the whole of its waſte. And the total amount of the births, during that time, is the whole ſupply it hath received of its own growth. Therefore the difference between the annual burials and births during this time, is the recruit it hath required to ſupport its original amount. Which is the general ſolution. Q. E. S.

Now the total amount of the burials from the revolution year 1688, to the year 1750, both incluſive, hath been ——	1,522,624.
And the total number of the chriſtnings during that time, hath amounted to —— —— —— ——	1,016,214.

There-

Therefore the difference, or the amount of the recruit which hath been furniſhed during this time by the country provinces of England, for repairing this waſte in London, hath been no leſs than the aſtoniſhing number of above five hundred thouſand perſons	506,410.

Theſe numerous recruits from the country have all been the flower of it, in the prime of their years, and in full poſſeſſion of their beſt activity and vigour.

What a monſtrous loſs hath this been to the nation? Compute the worth of each to have been only an hundred pounds upon a medium, which is the leaſt price ſuch perſons would bear upon an average, were they to be ſold for ſervants to any country, where ſuch purchaſes are admitted. Many of them being ſcholars, and perſons of ſkill in various ſciences, and manufactures; and the whole ſum will amount to fifty millions ſterling. This therefore is the value which hath been loſt to this nation by their deſtruction.

But it is further to be obſerved, that the number of the inhabitants of this city is conſiderably increaſed within the laſt ſixty three years: which increaſe alſo is to be added to the former recruit drawn from the country; for all which hath been ſupplied by London of its own growth hath already been eſtimated.

It is here probable, that two objections may be made; 1. That theſe people conſumed in London ſince the late revolution, have not all been a drain ſolely upon the reſt of this kingdom; but that many of them have been foreigners, natives of France; and other countries. In anſwer to which I muſt firſt obſerve, that as the births of theſe are not inſerted, ſo neither are the burials of a great part of them, in the foregoing account; which has chiefly conſiſted of thoſe in communion with the church of England: and ſecondly, that if the burials of theſe foreign adults had been inſerted, it would not prove the former account erroneous; becauſe London hath probably ſent forth as great a number of the adults of its own growth to America, and other foreign countries, as it hath received from thence towards its own recruit: therefore the annual acceſſion of foreigners to London, hath only kept the ſupply of adults, which it hath furniſhed to itſelf of its own growth, full; but hath not at all diminiſhed the provincial recruit.

The ſecond objection may, perhaps, be, that this loſs from the deſtruction of country adults, is ſtrangely exaggerated; for that moſt of them, had they continued in the country, might have done little more than have maintained themſelves, or perhaps might have been a burden to their ſeveral pariſhes. This is juſt as pleaſant, to compare it to a familiar inſtance, as if any one ſhould take my horſe, admitted to be worth ten pounds, from the ſervice he is capable of performing, and deſtroy him by labour and bad food, and then aver that he hath done me no damage, becauſe, he apprehended inſtead of employing my horſe myſelf, I ſhould rather have found him an uſeleſs expence.

But will it ſeriouſly be averred, that this half a million of active adults, had they continued in the country, would have yielded no benefit to the public?—Would they have added nothing to the improvement of the lands of this kingdom?—And hath no loſs really accrued to this nation from the deſtruction of country adults?—Let the provinces of the kingdom be all ſummoned to bear their teſtimony?—Let the country gentlemen be called forth, and declare,—Have they not continually felt for many years paſt, an increaſing want of huſbandmen, and day labourers? Have the farmers throughout the kingdom no juſt complaints of the exceſſive increaſing prices of workmen, and of the impoſſibility of procuring a ſufficient number at any prices? If this be ſo,—is it not an evil the moſt deſtructive, and fundamental? is it not attacking the great ſources of our national wealth? Our produces of corn, wool, and of all other ſorts, both of proviſions and materials for manufactures? is it not diminiſhing their annual growth in general, and raiſing the price of what is grown, without any advantage to the farmer or landlord? And whereto does this tend? is it not the direct courſe by the increaſing prices of proviſions throughout the kingdom to raiſe our own manufactures to a monſtrous dearneſs, and conſequently to ſtop their exportation? will not the ſure conſequence of this be, to encourage what are cheaper to be imported, and ſmuggled upon us, from other countries: which will carry abroad the wealth, which our more prudent anceſtors had procured for us, and urge our manufacturers alſo to ſeek employment in other countries; leaving a poor debauched remainder behind them, unworthy the glorous name of Britons.

Theſe are the direct conſequences flowing from this vaſt annual deſtruction of country adults, and non-adults alſo, above twelve years old, in London. And it well behoves the gentlemen of every province in the kingdom, to attend to this evil, without delay. The drain is upon them; and will continue ſo; For London will not feel any want of recruits, till there are no people left in the country.

'Tis therefore the peculiar buſineſs of the country gentlemen, to regulate the policy of London; 'tis more immediately their concern than of the gentlemen reſident in this city: to prevent the deſtruction of infants and adults in London, as far as poſſible, demands the inceſſant care of every true patriot. And every provincial gentleman ſhould be moved, not by mere curioſity alone, to inſpect at the beginning of every year the bill of mortality of London for the year antecedent, in order to obſerve the progreſs of its annual waſte, and conſequently of its annual drain from the country.

Was ſuch a juſt policy introduced in this city, as that the annual births might equal or exceed the burials, it would produce glorious and happy effects: the growth of all produces in the country, and the improvement of lands throughout the kingdom, would be greatly promoted; the country adults would have little temptation to come to London, where at preſent not only ſo many are deſtroyed, but multitudes of others who eſcape the deſtruction therein, and return from thence, teach the leſſons they have there learnt of idleneſs and debauchery to their country neighbours.—And that ſuch policy might be introduced, is evident from the ſtate of the annual births of Paris, which generally exceed the burials.—As will appear from the annexed account of the births and burials there, for a ſeries of nine years from 1728 to 1736, both years incluſive, publiſhed by Mr. Maitland.

An

An account of the births and burials in the city of Paris, for the following years reſpectively.

And it is certainly no impoſſible point, to give the births in the city of London the ſame ſuperiority over the burials, as the procreative power in this laſt city cannot be ſuppoſed, by any Engliſhman, to be inferior to that of Paris.

PROBLEM VII.

To find how many perſons, more than remain at preſent, would now probably have ſubſiſted in Britain, if the annual births and burials in London, from 1688 to 1750, both years incluſive, had been kept upon an equality.

SOLUTION.

This will be no leſs than the foregoing whole number of 500,000, who have before appeared to have been drawn from the country, and waſted in London; all which might not only have been preſerved at preſent to the nation, or an equivalent amount continued by procreation, but might have been increaſed, by this time, to a much larger multitude; probably, at leaſt, to 600,000. This is juſtly to be concluded from the common courſe of other adults, ſubſiſting in the country, eſpecially as theſe were the flower of both ſexes, and almoſt all capable of raiſing children. And here let it be conſidered, what a valuable acquiſition this number of all ages, and ſexes, would have been to the preſent ſtrength, and riches of this kingdom. A race of healthy and robuſt people. Admit, for the preſent, that they had only maintained themſelves by their own labour, and let the annual amount of their expences be eſtimated at ten pound for each head, upon a medium, which is a moderate computation during this term; then the whole expence of theſe people would have amounted, by this time, to about ſix millions annually; almoſt all which would have been paid to the landed gentlemen of England, in addition to their preſent rents. For it muſt all have been paid by this body of people, for their own proviſions, and to the manufacturers of Engliſh produces for their cloathing and other conſumptions; which manufacturers muſt again have laid out the ſums they received with the farmers, to buy proviſions; and all this, without increaſing the prices of proviſions, but by increaſing the quantity raiſed, and thereby rather diminiſhing the prices. And here let it be juſtly apprehended by country gentlemen, that the ſource, from whence they are to expect improvement of their fortunes, is not from an increaſe of money flowing into the nation; for though that may, in ſome reſpects, operate in their favour, yet, as it muſt flow into the kingdom through other channels than theirs, ſuch new perſons will raiſe the method of living upon them;—and the prices of all labour, manufactures, and other articles, will be greatly exaggerated; whereby they will ſcarcely be able to ſupport their uſual rank.—But the true ſource, from whence their eſtates are to be improved, is to increaſe the conſumption of their own produces, and to diminiſh the price of labour. That is, to increaſe the number of laborious people amongſt them, who have mouths to eat, and bodies to be covered, and at the ſame time have hands alſo to cultivate the lands of theſe gentlemen. Under this ſituation, they may enter with ſpirit upon the improvement of their worſt grounds, and not only raiſe, at a moderate expence, to themſelves, more produces, but happily find alſo their vent increaſed. This would ſenſibly render their purſes weightier, and fill the country with new people, and new improvements.

If the value of laborious active adults be thus juſtly conſidered, the miſchiefs of a continual drain of them from the country, to be waſted in London, without renewing themſelves, will begin to be viewed with due concern. The loſs within a term ſo ſhort, within the memory of thouſands living, at preſent, of no leſs than ſix hundred thouſand people, who might now in themſelves, and their children, have ſubſiſted in this nation, will at length be viewed with horror and amazement; a loſs wholly owing to the continual deſtruction of infants and adults in this ſlaughter-houſe of London.

PROBLEM.

To determine the amount of the annual drain made upon the provinces of this kingdom, for furniſhing recruits to London, ſuppoſing the number of people in this city to have continued, for ſome years paſt, upon a level.

SOLUTION.

This is evidently the difference between the annual burials and births; for ſuppoſing, in a ſimilar inſtance, a pond of water to be continually drained from every part, and to be ſupplied by a ſpring, naturally ariſing within itſelf. Now, if the amount of the continual drain be greater than that of the continual ſupply, and and this pond be kept to its original level, by continual additional recruits of water, it is evident that the annual amount of ſuch recruits will be the difference between the annual amount of the drain, and of the ſupply.

But the annual amount of the drain upon London by burials, hath been, upon a medium, for the laſt five years, 25,352 perſons. And the amount of its ſupply, from its own ſpring of births within itſelf, hath been, upon a medium, for the ſame time, 14,496 annually. Therefore, the amount of the recruit, which it hath drawn from the country, during each year, for theſe five years paſt, hath been no leſs than 10,856, upon a medium; which ſeems to be the rate of its preſent progreſs. And whether ſuch an annual deſtruction of the moſt active and uſeful ſubjects of the kingdom, is to be ſuffered to continue, and to rob the provinces of their beſt hands, muſt now be ſubmitted to the legiſlative wiſdom.

It may only be added, that it appears by the firſt table annexed, that the total amount of the burials, excluſive of the plague, for the laſt hundred and fifty years, hath been —— —— ——	2,631,137
To which, add what have died of the plague, during that time	188,571
Total of burials in London during this term—	2,819,708
Deduct from this the total amount of the chriſtnings during the ſame time —— —— ——	1,806,769
Difference	1,012,939

This ſum of upwards of one million of people actually appears upon record, to have been waſted in London, during this term, more than it has raiſed of its own growth, and ſtill many more have undoubtedly died therein unrecorded, beyond the births; which ought to be added to this account.

This would be the caſe, ſuppoſing London had gained no increaſe of inhabitants ſince the year 1600; but, inſtead of keeping the ſame amount, it hath continually drawn to itſelf increaſing multitudes, and hath now actually in its own poſſeſſion 400,000 inhabitants more than at the beginning of this term; which, together with their produce by procreation, it proceeds forwards, deſtroying with ſtill greater havock than formerly; even at no leſſer a rate than of 10,856 annually; ſo that if this be not interrupted, in the next hundred and fifty years, it will abſolutely deſtroy, inſtead of one million, above one million and half of people; and this without begging any aſſiſtance from the plague.

In this place, perhaps, may be required the ſolution of the following

PROBLEM.

To find the preſent tendency of the progreſs of London; or, in other words, whether the people of this city proceed increaſing, diminiſhing, or nearly upon a level.

SOLU-

SOLUTION.

To ſtate what ſuggeſts itſelf at this inſtant, in favour of each ſide of the queſtion,—And, firſt, to begin with the opinion which prevails, that London increaſes:—Under this head are to be urged,—the growing progreſs of luxury in London; the larger number of expenſive families, with more attendants and ſervants reſident here, than formerly; the augmentation of the national debt, which attaches many to this city; and the increaſing number of houſes in London, of which a ſmaller proportion than ever are now vacant.—It is certain, all theſe circumſtances imply an increaſing number of adults in this metropolis; and ſuch is the ſtate of its progreſs, if no ſuperior cauſes operate at the ſame time to the contrary.

On the other hand it is certain that the quantity of commercial buſineſs tranſacted in London, for ſeveral years paſt, particularly in the importation of the great articles of wine and tobacco, and the iſſue of theſe from hence to other parts of the kingdom, hath much decreaſed; the out-ports having gradually augmented, during this time, their dealings in theſe and other commercial branches; and go on at a great increaſing rate, to furniſh ſupplies of many commodities to various parts of the kingdom, which were formerly drawn almoſt wholly from London: this muſt operate, therefore, in preventing the uſual demand made by London, for great numbers of adults, who were neceſſarily employed in theſe branches:—Again, the improvement of the roads near this metropolis, and the increaſing conveniencies of conveyance to all the villages around it, prevent that ſtagnation of people in London, which was formerly; enabling great numbers, who have buſineſs to tranſact in London, to come there for this purpoſe, during a few hours only of the day, and to retire into the country in the evening; which is become a general practice.—Add to which, the improvement of the roads from London to every part of the kingdom:—Which hath alſo operated towards diminiſhing the medium number of inhabitants conſtantly reſident in this city.—It will here probably be ſaid, that this improvement of the roads may as well contribute to bring more perſons to London, as to carry them from thence to the country: but the caſe is apprehended to be very different;—for the great body of people, who come to London, are neceſſarily drawn thither by commercial buſineſs; by the courts of law; attendance upon parliament, and applications for preferment:—Whatever be the ſtate of the roads, theſe will all come to London.—Wherefore the improvement of the roads does not greatly act towards bringing more perſons to London; but it acts towards enabling theſe perſons, at Chriſtmas, and at all other ſeaſons, when they can gain even one week's intermiſſion from buſineſs, to retire for that time into the country; whereas they were formerly pent up in London, during the whole winter.—Many families alſo, who were formerly hurried from the country to town, at the end of autumn, to avoid the badneſs of the roads, are now able to continue many months longer in the country; being ſecure of convenient paſſage to town at any ſeaſon: this therefore muſt greatly leſſen the conſtant number of inhabitants in London, computed at a medium. At the ſame time, theſe gentry, and their tradeſmen alſo, continually retain their houſes in London; which accounts for ſo many of them being conſtantly tenanted. Beſides this, a practice hath lately prevailed, vailed of working, in the country, manufactures for ſale in London, which formerly employed great numbers of journeymen in this city: this is viſible in the article of ſhoes; in which there are fewer, by many hundreds, retained at work, than were twenty years ago in this metropolis; and this method will probably be followed in many other branches of conſumption.—Eſpecially as the expence of carriage from the country to London, by the improvement of the roads, becomes eaſy.—Theſe conſiderations are therefore to be urged, in ſupport of the opinion, that the number of adults, conſtantly reſident in London, rather diminiſhes.—However, it will be difficult from talking at large upon any, or all of theſe articles, on both ſides of the queſtion, to ſtrike the balance;—It muſt therefore be referred to the bills of mortality.

In entering upon this reference, it may ſafely be premiſed, that the rate of mortality in London, of late years, hath gone on continually increaſing, both in reſpect to adults and infants; which is particularly to be charged to the abominable, notorious conſumption of ſpirituous liquors. Wherefore, if the annual amount of the burials, for theſe twenty years paſt, had been even greater than it was formerly, this might juſtly be allotted to the ſame number of people as before, and to their greater deſtruction. But if the amount of the burials for twenty years paſt, has been gradually declining; and the amount of the chriſtnings, for the ſame time, hath been alſo in a courſe of declenſion, ſtill more ſwift, it is then preſumed the diſpute is determined; for if a greater mortality hath ſubſiſted among the common people, of all ages, and yet a leſſer number have annually died, for ſeveral years under it, it is evident that the ſum total, out of which they have died, muſt have been diminiſhed.

But that ſuch a decreaſe hath actually happened, both in the burials and chriſtnings, will be demonſtrated by the following table.

Both years' inclusive.	Total burials.	Total chriſtnings.	Annual medium of burials.	Annual medium of chriſtnings.
1726 to 1730	142,358	87,890	28,472	17,578
1731 to 1735	127,453	87,586	25,491	17,517
1736 to 1740	137,472	80,723	27,494	16,145
1741 to 1745	126,754	72,097	25,351	14,419
1746 to 1750	126,763	72,480	25,353	14,496

Whereby

Whereby it is evident, that in the courſe of twenty years paſt, the aggregate amount of the burials for five years hath ſunk from 142,358 to 126,763; and the aggregate amount of the chriſtnings, during the ſame term, from 87,890 to 72,480; which, it is apprehended, ſufficiently teſtifies, that the total amount of the medium number of people conſtantly reſident in London, for the laſt twenty five years, hath proceeded forwards continually decreaſing.

However, though the whole medium number of perſons continually ſubſiſting together in London be diminiſhed, yet it is much to be ſuſpected, from the continual decreaſe of the chriſtnings of late years, that this diminution lies ſolely upon the infants under ten years old; and not upon the number of perſons above ten years old ſubſiſting in this city.—To bring this alſo to the teſt of calculation, let the amounts of the burials of children under ten years old, and alſo of the burials above that age, for the twenty laſt years, be ſeparately exhibited in the following table.

Years. (Both years inclusive.)	Totals of burials under ten years old.	Totals of burials ten years old, and upwards.
1736 to 1740	68399	69073
1741 to 1745	57848	68906
1746 to 1750	56721	70042

It thus appears from this table, that the number of perſons of ten years old and upwards, continually ſubſiſting in London, upon a medium, proceeds rather increaſing; and that it hath proceeded in the courſe of the laſt fifteen years in the increaſing proportion of 60479 to 70042, whilſt the number of perſons under ten years old, hath ſunk, during this time, in the proportion of 66974 to 56721, which is the reverſe; and in a greater decreaſing proportion ——— Therefore, though the numbers, who are ten years old and upwards, have increaſed, the numbers under that age have ſtill more been diminiſhed: whence the total number of perſons in London of all ages is rather decreaſed; the diminution lying wholly upon that part, which is under ten years old; and proceeding from two melancholy cauſes, a leſs number of annual births, and a greater proportion of what are born dying in their firſt infancy.——The numbers which ſurvive being chiefly the children of perſons of ſubſtance, inſtead of thoſe of the common people.——— And this muſt ſtill aggravate the drain upon the country: for if both the number of children born in London is leſs than formerly, and a leſs portion of theſe, in reſpect to their whole number, paſſes beyond ten years old, it is evident that the annual ſupply which this city furniſhes to itſelf of its own growth, continually decreaſes.———But the whole number of perſons of ten years old and upwards ſubſiſting in London, proceeds rather increaſing; therefore if London furniſhes leſs towards this ſupply than formerly, the country muſt furniſh more; and conſequently, the drain upon the provinces of this nation goes on continually increaſing.

The preſent diminution of the chriſtnings in London is indeed very ſhocking and alarming; their amount for the laſt ten years being ſunk to as low an ebb, as they were even ſixty years ago; for the amount of the chriſtnings for the ten years, from 1681 to 1690, both incluſive, aroſe to 144,390, and went on rapidly increaſing, whilſt the burials for the ſame time amounted to 223,626; whereas the chriſtnings for the laſt ten years, ending at Chriſtmas 1750, amounted to no more than 144,577, which exceeds the amount of the chriſtnings for the former term, ſixty years before it, only by the ſmall number of one hundred and eighty ſeven; whilſt the burials aroſe for the ſame term to 253,517, which exceeds the amount of the burials in the former term, by no leſs than twenty nine thouſand eight hundred and ninety one, falling ſhort only by one hundred and nine of the full ſum of thirty thouſand:———This is not oratorical aggravation, but undeniable fact, glaring upon the face of the bills of mortality.

The foregoing calculations are reſpectfully ſubmitted, with an honeſt intention, to the public. And the foundations upon which they proceed have been conſtantly laid open, perhaps with too much prolixity, that every gentleman may readily convince himſelf of their rectitude, or miſtake. It is to be hoped, that the procuring, and digeſting into proper tables, ſo many particular articles of information upon this curious and important ſubject, will be no unacceptable preſent to thoſe into whoſe hands this treatiſe ſhall enter.—All care has been taken to avoid errors in theſe tables, which the very ſhort time allotted to this work would permit. Other gentlemen, with more leiſure, and ſuperior abilities, having theſe materials furniſhed to their hands, and the riſk of advancing the firſt calculations adventured upon, will quickly proceed much beyond theſe haſty eſſays, and eaſily confirm the concluſions in them, or diſcover their errors. Eſpecially if it could be hoped, that the Royal Society might at length be awakened after its very long paſt repoſe.

But, before theſe calculations be cloſed, it may be proper to obviate one objection, which I recollect hath been briefly ſpoken to already, but may require a more diſtinct anſwer.—It may perhaps be alledged, that great bodies of perſons, of the growth of London, have gone to our American colonies, and have furniſhed ſeveral ultra-marine demands, which muſt otherwiſe have fallen upon the provinces of this realm; and therefore, that this city hath ſaved a drain, which would otherwiſe have been made upon the country by this article.—To which I anſwer, admitting this to be ſo, which is however in part diſputable, that in recompence hereof, London hath received a continual acceſſion of foreigners, particularly of French refugees, to a large amount, which may juſtly be ſuppoſed to have balanced the egreſſion of its own natives. It hath therefore conſtantly received an equivalent for theſe ſupplies, which it may be ſuggeſted to have furniſhed to our American colonies.

And if London had not ſubſiſted, though the provinces, in ſuch caſe, muſt have furniſhed theſe foreign demands, yet they would alſo have received to themſelves the foreign recruits; all which, as the caſe has ſtood, have been wholly poſſeſſed by London.

Laſtly, If the total amount be demanded of the whole body of people ſubſiſting together in London upon a medium, for the five laſt years, it may thus briefly be approached, to ſufficient exactneſs. The number which hath died of twenty years old and upwards, upon a medium of theſe years, hath been 13244 annually; of which it may be ſuppoſed, that one out of ſixty die in the courſe of a year: therefore, the conſtant amount of theſe adults ſubſiſting together in London is 60 × 13244, that is, 794,640.———Again, the number who have died between ten and twenty years old, upon a medium of the ſame term, have been 762 annually, which may be ſuppoſed to be the one hundredth part of the number of ſuch perſons generally ſurviving together, therefore 76200 is the total amount within this diviſion; and the number which have annually died in the ſame term, between five and ten years old, appears to have been 851 upon a medium; which may have been about one fiftieth part of their total.

Therefore, the number ſurviving together at one time in this diviſion, hath been about 42,550 perſons. But, as to the number under five years old, ſurviving together at any one time, it is thought proper to omit inſerting any eſtimate of it in this place.

The total of which three antecedent articles alone, is 913,390 perſons. And if the number which this city contained under twenty years old, was equal to that above that age, according to the general courſe ſubſiſting in country villages, and which would be the caſe here, if its births annually exceeded its burials, and the ſame care was taken of infants as is in the country, the number of its inhabitants would be above one million and half of perſons.———But, as it ſtands at preſent, it is the greateſt monſter of the ſort which hath ever appeared upon the face of the globe.

But to proceed. The gradual diminution of the annual births for the laſt twenty-ſix years,———and a greater proportion than formerly of thoſe, who are born of poor parents, annually dying, plainly diſcover ſome new enfeebling cauſe powerfully attacking the common people, from whom the great bulk of the chriſtnings is conſtantly derived.———And what is really this cauſe, is impoſſible to be doubted, under the preſent ſhocking conſumption of ſpirituous liquors.———Aſk the phyſician, and he will inſtantly declare, that the certain conſequence to adults of drinking theſe burning potions is to be enervated, and rendered leſs fit for bodily labour, and procreation of children.———Let it now be ſeen by the bills of mortality how this actually has reſulted in fact.

It appears by theſe bills, that the amount of the births in London went on annually increaſing to the year 1724; in which year they amounted to upwards of 19000: but, ſince then, have continually ſunk to the preſent time; and now ſcarcely ariſe to 14500 annually.—Nor have actually for ten years paſt amounted to this laſt ſum, upon a medium. Whereby it appears, that this diminution of the the births ſet out from the ſame time that the conſumption of theſe liquors by the common people became enormous; and that as this conſumption hath been conſtantly increaſing ſince that time, the amount of the births hath likewiſe been continually diminiſhing. But let this diminution, and the number of infants loſt thereby within this city, be ſtrictly computed. Now the amount of the chriſtnings in the year 1724, was 19370; and had proceeded in a gradual courſe of increaſe up to that number.—Admit then, that they would have ſtood only to this amount from that time to the preſent, without advancing, beyond this level, though that was their evident tendency: then for the twenty-ſix years paſt, from 1725 to 1750, both years incluſive, the amount of the births would have been 26×19370, that is, 503,620. But the actual amount of the births for theſe years hath been no more than 419,635. The difference between which numbers is 83985, falling ſhort, by only the ſmall number of fifteen, of fourſcore and four thouſand infants; —which, at a very moderate computation, have been loſt, during this ſhort term, within this capital only, by the drinking of ſpirituous liquors.—Beſides what have been loſt in all other parts of the kingdom, wherein this conſumption hath been prevalent.

Can it be neceſſary to add to this ſhocking loſs, by prevention of births, the ſickly ſtate of ſuch infants as are born, who, with difficulty paſs through the firſt ſtages of life, and live very few of them to years of manhood.—What actually arrive to it, being alſo a weakly unhealthy race, unfit for the great uſeful ſervices of ſociety, labour, and agriculture.

Aſk the maſters of every trade, and every manufacture, whether they feel no miſchiefs in their trades, from the conſumption of theſe liquors? They will tell you, with horror, the ſtupefaction they cauſe in their workmen, and continual diſability to perform their labour.

Enquire from the phyſicians of the ſeveral hoſpitals in this city, whether any increaſe of patients, and of what ſort, are daily brought under their care? They will all declare, increaſing multitudes of dropſical and conſumptive people, ariſing from the effects of ſpirituous liquors.

And if any conviction was farther wanted, it would be eaſy to draw it from all other ſcenes of inferior life, in ſupport of the neceſſity of totally ſuppreſſing the conſumption of theſe liquors by the common people; which ought only to be ſold at the ſame ſhops where arſenic and laudanum are allowed to be vended.

Having hitherto proceeded in pointing out evils, it may perhaps be expected, that ſome remedies alſo ſhould be propoſed, towards preventing the annual waſte of infants and adults in this metropolis; and to encourage matrimony.—In this view I have added the following propoſals.—The firſt of which, I am not inſenſible, will appear to many perſons extremely chimerical.

The unhealthineſs of the air of London, though not greater than formerly, has been mentioned before, as one operating cauſe of the annual deſtruction of many people. This, indeed, is the leaſt powerful weapon, in the hands of death; yet, to obviate its force, as the preſervation and health of the people in every inſtance is of great importance, it is propoſed, that the cleanſing of this city ſhould be put under one uniform public management, and all the filth be carried into lighters, and conveyed by the Thames to proper diſtances in the country; where it would be of great benefit to the lands, inſtead of being lodged, as at preſent, on the outſides of this city; a nauſeous, noxious ſpectacle.—It is alſo further propoſed upon this head, that open ſtreets nearly parallel to each other, at proper diſtances, be cut from the river ſide through the town, and continued in ſtrait roads or walks for ſeveral miles diſtant, directly into the country. By which meaſures, the air of London would be free from many of the poiſonous particles loading it at preſent; and a new circulation of pure air introduced. Opportunities alſo would hereby be given to the inhabitants of this city, to extend themſelves further into the country, and to breathe a freſher air than they generally can at preſent, in a walk of the ſame length:—And however romantic this may ſeem at firſt view, whoſoever has obſerved the vaſt multitudes of people poured forth by this city into the fields around it, on ſummer evenings; and conſidered the great refreſhment and ſupport of their health, which they conſtantly derive from theſe promenades, will perhaps think this propoſal merits regard: the execution of it is far inferior to the public works, which old Rome could boaſt of the ſame ſort: her grand Appian, Flaminian, and twenty other roads, cut in ſtrait lines for many miles together into the country; and her magnificent aqueducts;—all built at the public expence for public convenience.

2°. To prevent the grand annual deſtruction of the infants of poor married women in this city, and the deſtruction and ſuppreſſion of the infants of ſingle women, it is propoſed, that ſeveral foundling-hoſpitals be eſtabliſhed in different parts of this town, for the receiving all children, which ſhall be offered, without exception; to be conducted under one uniform public management;—and to be ſupported by an annual tax upon all perſons in London, of both ſexes above twenty-one years old, who have never been married;—at proper rates ſuitable to their reſpective ranks and qualities. A tax, which applied to ſo compaſſionate a public ſervice, would not be regretted by thoſe on whom it was raiſed; who would rightly conſider the benefits attending it, and the annual ſaving of thouſands of infants from being deſtroyed by various methods.

This tax might be collected in the ſame manner, and according to the ſame proportion as the poll-taxes were, ſoon after the revolution. And one hundred thouſand pounds be immediately raiſed upon the credit of this fund, as ſoon as it ſhall be eſtabliſhed, in order to carry ſo valuable and compaſſionate a public deſign immediately into execution;—the means of conducting it in the beſt method, being happily furniſhed from the experience already obtained by the prudent and judicious management of that ſmall contribution, which hath been made for a few years paſt, to a charity of the ſame ſort begun in this city.

3°. The luxury of great families, in their preſent general uſe of unmarried ſervants, conſiderably obſtructs the annual produce of children:—Thus, ſuppoſe a faſhionable family in London, to conſiſt of half a dozen perſons, and upwards;—and of theſe, perhaps at moſt, only the maſter and miſtreſs married; the reſt, all ſervants marriageable, and unmarried:—It is here evident, that the luxury of the maſter and miſtreſs detains many adults of both ſexes from manufacture and agriculture, merely for grandeur and their own perſonal attendance; and reſtrains them from marrying, during their continuance in this ſervice.—Is not this a treſpaſs upon the national growth, and a miſapplication of the labour and induſtry of many individuals? And though it may be proper, in a wealthy community, to indulge dulge ſuch exceſſes, where they run not to great enormity, yet ſurely the perſons indulged in them, and who publicly declare thereby, their income to be ſuperfluous, cannot decently oppoſe the making a ſuitable recompence to the public for their reſpective treſpaſſes in this article.

4°. The retailers of commodities, not being employed in manufactures themſelves, nor in public labour, but ſubſiſting by the advantages they take of the induſtry of one part, and the appetites of the other part of the ſociety preying upon both, and being too numerous in many branches: it is therefore propoſed, that all preſent retailers ſhall take licences from the public for vending the produce of the induſtry of others.—This extended throughout the kingdom, would furniſh a very conſiderable public revenue, and might be laid in aid of any diminution of the preſent duty upon ſpirituous liquors:—this tax would be welcome and chearfully paid, if the following regulation was annexed to it; which is, that hawkers and pedlars be entirely ſuppreſſed: a ſet of unmeriting people, who carry luxury into all corners; and ſollicit and enflame the pride of every farmer's wife and daughter in the kingdom. It is further propoſed under this head, that all unmarried perſons be prohibited from ſetting up anew, in any retail buſineſs; ſuch perſons not meriting the indulgence of this liberty from the public.—Under this regulation many perſons, who would otherwiſe continue ſingle, would enter into matrimony; whereby the annual produce of children would be promoted, and the riſing national ſtrength and wealth greatly increaſed.

If the clergy of the realm would zealouſly unite in warning their reſpective flocks of the fatal miſchiefs flowing upon the nation, from the uſe of theſe ſpirituous liquors by the common people;—the ruin of all decency, ſhame, morality, and principle, it would animate all perſons in their ſeveral ſtations, to exert themſelves to ſuppreſs this evil, now ravaging like one continual peſtilence throughout the kingdom. And this is to be hoped the rather, as upon other occaſions they have made pathetic exhortations, with great effect, upon the dreaded approach of leſs formidable, though public evils; ſuch as diſtempers amongſt the cattle, and earthquakes;—ſome of which have actually happened, and others only happened to be expected.—But this is a diſtemper amongſt the people, which hath raged for many years paſt, and actually now rages with increaſing fury.—Threatning not only a ſhock, but a total overthrow of all induſtry amongſt us, and mortality.

But in this ſituation, whatever lukewarmneſs may appear in ſome, the zeal of others of this body is highly to be applauded. And it muſt give ſatisfaction in this juncture to every lover of his country to know, that due remedies to theſe evils are now the ſubject of the conſideration of the legiſlature; and that every laudable meaſure which can be propoſed, every ſalutary ſcheme which can be offered from any hand, for reforming theſe miſchiefs, will be ſure to obtain full countenance, and ſupport, under the upright, diſintereſted and public-ſpirited miniſtry of Mr. PELHAM.

POSTSCRIPT.

THE time neceſſary to the working of the ſheet, antecedent to this, at the preſs, allowing me a ſhort leiſure, I ſhall allot it to the clearing of ſome articles in the foregoing work, upon which, it is poſſible, doubts may be ſuggeſted.

It

It may, perhaps, be imagined by ſome perſons, that the accounts of the chriſtnings and burials, in the bills of mortality, are not to be depended on; and therefore, that inferences drawn from them may be erroneous. I ſhall therefore beg leave to advance the following

PROPOSITION;

To demonſtrate that the reſpective annual amounts in the bills of mortality of London of the chriſtnings and burials of perſons in communion with the church of England, are the total amounts of all ſuch perſons; or, that the ſmall additions to each, including alſo the births and burials of diſſenters, are proportional to theſe amounts; and therefore, that any inferences drawn from theſe bills, in regard to the total numbers born and deceaſed, cannot be exaggerated, but may be defective.

DEMONSTRATION.

It is not to be doubted, but the numbers exhibited in theſe bills, to have been chriſtned and buried, have been actually born, and deceaſed in London.—But the doubt is, what omiſſions have been annually made of each ſort. Now it cannot be ſuppoſed, that there have been many ſuch of the church of England; if it be conſidered, that the performance of Chriſtian baptiſm and burial is yet very rarely omitted to perſons of this church, either born, or deceaſed. This would be to ſuppoſe the evil complained of, to have really ſpread farther than hath been repreſented, and to have totally obliterated all the remains of decency among the inferior claſs of people.—It is therefore to be preſumed, that very few of this church, who are born or buried in London, are omitted to be inſerted in the bills of mortality. And if there be any ſuch actually omitted, the omiſſion may be juſtly ſuppoſed to be equal on both ſides.—But beſides this, it is certain that there are ſeveral who annually die in London, and are carried from thence to diſtant places to be interred, who are not inſerted in the London burials. Therefore, if the exact account of the births and deaths of perſons in London, eſteemed in communion with the church of England, was inſerted in theſe bills, it is to be ſuppoſed, though there might be the addition of a few units, yet that in theſe added on both ſides, the births would be ſtill exceeded by the deaths. Therefore, the preſent proportion between both inſerted in the annual bills of mortality, would not be thereby altered. And as to the diſſenters, whoſe chriſtnings and burials are not inſerted, theſe are alſo to be ſuppoſed to have happened in the ſame proportion.—Therefore, if the annual totals of the burials and chriſtnings in London be augmented, beyond what they ſtand in the preſent bills, to their full amount, as their proportions to each other continue the ſame, their differences will neceſſarily become greater; and therefore, the miſchiefs exhibited in the foregoing work will ſtill be greater than they have been repreſented. Q. E. D.

It was intended, in addition to the foregoing propoſals, to have alſo ſubmitted one for ſuppreſſing the enormous conſumption of ſpirituous liquors, without giving any encouragement to ſmuggling, and providing at the ſame time a full compenſation to the public revenue; but I have choſen, for ſome reaſons, to withdraw from the preſs, and reſerve at preſent, the papers upon this ſubject; particularly, being firſt deſirous of obſerving, what acceptance this previous part ſhall appear to merit from the public.
